[2] NB—The Overlapping Benefits Regulations provide for the rate of child dependency increases, guardian's allowance and child special allowance to be adjusted where the increase or allowance is payable for the eldest eligible child for whom Child Benefit is also payable. The weekly rate of the increase or allowance is reduced by the differential (less £3.50 from April 2000) between the rate of Child Benefit payable for the oldest eligible child and that payable for a subsequent child.

Winter Fuel Payment

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many additional households are entitled to the Winter Fuel Payment as a result of (a) eligibility being extended to men aged 60 to 64 years and (b) the inclusion of other groups of people not receiving a state pension or other benefit. [138205]

Mr. Darling: An estimated 900,000 households will be newly eligible for a Winter Fuel Payment this winter. Of these, an estimated 850,000 contain a man aged 60–64 and a further 50,000 contain someone of pensionable age who is not in receipt of a State Pension or other qualifying benefit.

Notes:

1. Estimates are based on the 1998–99 Family Resources Survey.
2. Figures are rounded to the nearest 50,000.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioner households are entitled to the Winter Fuel Payment. [136319]

Angela Eagle: Last winter, 1999–2000, around 10 million pensioners in over 7.5 million households benefited from Winter Fuel Payments.

Following a ruling by the European Court of Justice, on 16 December 1999, we changed the conditions of eligibility for the Winter Fuel Payment scheme. In essence, the scheme was extended and Winter Fuel Payments became payable to men as well as women from age 60, and the need to be in receipt of a qualifying benefit was removed.

State Pension

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people over the State Pension age (a) have no entitlement to the basic State Pension and (b) are not entitled to the full value of the basic State Pension. [138207]

Mr. Darling: An estimated 460,000 people of pensionable age in Great Britain have no entitlement to the basic State Pension. A further 890,000 people in receipt of the basic State Pension are not entitled to the full value of the Category A pension (in the case of men and single women) or the full Category BL rate (in the case of married women).

Notes:

1. Estimates are based on a 5 per cent. sample and are therefore subject to sampling error.
2. Estimates are rounded to the nearest 10,000

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) of 31 October 2000, Official Report, columns 349–50W, (a) how many people have been sent letters inviting them to apply for the Minimum Income Guarantee and of these (i) how many tear-off slips have been returned and (ii) how many of the letters have resulted in a successful claim and (b) how many people have contacted the Minimum Income Guarantee helpline and as a result (i) how many claims have been submitted as a result of a helpline inquiry and (ii) how many of the helpline inquiries have resulted in a successful claim. [137525]

Mr. Rooker: Around 500,000 pensioners have requested claim forms or contacted the Minimum Income Guarantee helpline. The campaign is still in progress so comprehensive data are not yet available on the complete number of successful claims awarded. Of those processed half have been successful.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the average award of Minimum Income Guarantee which has been paid to the pensioners who have started to receive the Minimum Income Guarantee as a result of his Department's current take-up campaign. [137408]

Mr. Rooker: Pensioners who have made successful claims as a result of the Minimum Income Guarantee take-up campaign are better off by around £20.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the reasons for the fall (1) in new Housing Benefit claims determined within the statutorily required period of 14 days between 1998–99 and 1999–2000; and what plans he has to halt this decline; [137064]

(2) in Housing Benefit renewal claims determined within the statutorily required period of 14 days, between 1998–99 and 1999–2000; and what plans he has to halt this decline; [137065]

(3) in new Council Tax Benefit claims determined within the statutorily required period of 14 days, between 1998–99 and 1999–2000; and what plans he has to halt this decline. [137066]

Angela Eagle: Recently published summary statistics for Great Britain indicate that the number of claims for Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit that have been determined within 14 days has fallen. We are determined to secure improvements in Housing Benefit administration and have introduced a number of measures which will help to achieve this.

We have set Best Value performance indicators from this April designed to ensure that authorities provide their communities with a faster, more accurate Housing Benefit service which is more secure against fraud, and which provides value for money and takes account of the views and needs of clients. Authorities are required to set challenging targets against these indicators and demonstrate that they are achieving year on year improvements in the standard of service they provide.

The Benefit Fraud Inspectorate is conducting an ongoing programme of inspections of local authorities, encouraging them to develop action plans to improve administration and tackle fraud and error. Best practice guidance, developed through this programme, has been made available to all local authorities. As at 3 November 2000, the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate had published reports on over 70 local authorities. We have made it abundantly clear to all local authority Chief Executives that where the Inspectorate finds evidence of persistent failings, we will use our powers to direct the authority as to the improved standards it is to attain and the timescales for achieving them. We issued the first such Directions in August 2000.

We are making better use of IT to speed up administration and reduce the scope for fraud and error. Many millions of paper forms previously sent by the Benefits Agency to local authorities through the post are now sent electronically, significantly reducing the time taken just to transfer information.

We have made significant progress. Our Housing Green Paper, published in April, set out how we can take this further. We are currently studying the responses to the Green Paper and will announce our decisions shortly.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the amount of Housing Benefit which is currently owing to housing associations as a result of delays in the administration of Housing Benefit. [136318]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 6 November 2000]: We keep in touch with the National Housing Federation about Housing Benefit owed to the tenants of housing associations and other registered social landlords. However, the Department does not hold information on the amount of benefit which might be involved. We are currently looking at what further steps might be taken to improve the administration of Housing Benefit.

Maternity Benefits

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have been eligible for the maternity payment and the Sure Start maternity grant, and how many people have received each of these benefits, in each month since May 1997. [134552]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Notes:

1. Maternity payment figures May 1997 to March 1998 may contain very minor inaccuracies because of computer programming parameters.
2. Figures from April 1998 to September 2000 represent the number of initial awards plus the number awarded on appeal, reduced by the number of payments returned to the Department.
3. Maternity payments and Sure Start maternity grants must actually be claimed in order for an award to be made, therefore details of those who might have been eligible but did not claim are not available.

Departmental Statistics

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 18 January 2000, Official Report, column 427W, if he will list the publication dates of statistics to be released by his Department and agencies in the next 12 months. [137176]

Mr. Rooker: The information in the table relates to statistics published by the Department under the National Statistics banner.

Although many of the dates are provisional at this stage, final release dates will be notified in the National Statistics Update issued by the Office for National Statistics in the month prior to the publication. This is in line with DSS release practice.

Age Allowances

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the current value of the (a) Christmas Bonus and (b) 25p age addition for pensioners aged over 80 years would be if they had been uprated in line with prices since their first introduction. [137526]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the written answers I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew) on 14 April 2000, Official Report, columns 301–04W.

Benefits Expenditure

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 30 October 2000, Official Report, column 261W, on benefits expenditure, if he will reproduce the table on the assumption that working families tax credit is a means-tested benefit. [137300]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Contributory, means-tested with tax credits and other benefits as a proportion of total benefits and tax credits

Percentage

	Contributory	Means-tested	Others
1996–97	46	35	19
1997–98	46	34	20
1998–99	47	33	20
1999–2000	47	32	22

Note:

Working families tax credit and disabled persons tax credit have been included in the means-tested benefits. This causes a 1 per cent. increase in the proportion of means-tested benefits for 1999–2000 to 32 per cent.

Social Fund

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of people in each sub-region who were turned down for social fund budgeting loans in 1999–2000 on the grounds that they already had excessive levels of outstanding debt. [134514]

Angela Eagle: On 5 April 1999 we introduced major changes to the budgeting loan scheme, which have made it fairer, more objective and quicker and easier for customers to use. Applications are decided according to a few simple facts relating to the applicant's length of time on benefit and the size of their family, taking into account the level of budgeting loan debt they may already have. Because loans are repayable, applicants no longer have to justify their reasons for needing a loan or provide information about what they will spend it on.

During 1999–2000 the scheme provided more help to more people than ever before. The number of applications for budgeting loans increased by 26 per cent. to almost 1.7 million. The number of successful applications increased by 9 per cent., with 82,000 more people receiving help than in 1998–99. Expenditure rose by 15 per cent. to almost £400 million, an increase of £52 million over the amount spent in 1998–99. And, for the first time since the fund started in April 1988, over 1 million budgeting loans were awarded in a year.

The significant increase in applications inevitably led to an increase in the number that were refused a loan—38 per cent. of applications were refused compared to 33 per cent. in 1998–99—an increase of only 5 percentage points.

As part of the April 1999 changes, the wide-ranging reasons for refusal, which had existed previously, were radically simplified and reduced. As a result, a new reason for refusal, which only applies to people with social fund debt, has been introduced. Those with existing debt of half or more of their maximum possible loan amount are restricted from having further loans until their outstanding debt drops below that level, at which point they are free to re-apply. The scheme therefore does allow limited access to further loans while previous loans are still being repaid but without encouraging people to run up and maintain high levels of debt. It would not be fair to allow the cash-limited budget to be monopolised by people continually topping-up their loans to the maximum at the expense of other applicants.

By limiting access by those with existing social fund debt, the scheme is able to offer loans to all applicants who satisfy the qualifying conditions and who have no debt. While benefiting all family types this change has enabled more single people to access the scheme, the group most likely to have been refused a loan on priority grounds under the previous scheme.

Budgeting loan applications refused between April 1999 and March 2000 because of the level of existing budgeting loan debt are given in the table by Benefits Agency Area Directorates. For completeness the table also includes the number of awards made.

DEFENCE

Far East Prisoners of War

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if ex-gratia payments to former prisoners of war in the Far East will include civilians. [136528]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the statement in the House on 7 November 2000, Official Report, columns 159–170.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Far East prisoners of war are still living; and what estimate he has made of the numbers residing in East Lancashire. [136554]

Dr. Moonie: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which my hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces gave him on 18 January 2000, Official Report, column 398W.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on compensation for former PoWs of the Japanese; and what estimate has been made of the numbers involved. [137344]

Dr. Moonie: I refer my hon. Friend to my statement in the House on 7 November 2000, Official Report, columns 159–70.

Meteorological Office

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future location of the Meteorological Office. [138176]

Dr. Moonie: The Met Office has recognised for some time that its existing accommodation in Bracknell is becoming increasingly expensive and unsuitable for its future business needs. The overwhelming conclusion of the business case, produced to examine the options, showed that a new site with purpose built accommodation was the best way of meeting its long-term needs and those of its customers. The Met Office plans to relocate by March 2003.

Following a thorough search and careful evaluation of potential sites throughout the United Kingdom, the Met Office selected four—Beaufort Park in Bracknell, Shinfield Park in Reading, Exeter Business park and Norwich Research Park—that it felt could best meet its needs. After detailed consideration of many factors, including cost, staffing issues, proximity to customers and other key stakeholders, planning and environmental issues, Exeter Business Park has been chosen as the preferred site.

This has not been an easy decision since all four shortlisted sites had obvious strengths. Nevertheless, the Met Office is certain that Exeter is the best location from which to build a secure and successful future.

The two consortia with whom the Met Office is negotiating over the provision and ongoing maintenance of the new accommodation will now work up detailed proposals for the Exeter site; tenders are due to be submitted to the Met Office by the end of February 2001 and a contract is expected to be placed by June 2001.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Controls

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he received between November 1999 and November 2000 on (a) the timing and (b) the content of strategic export controls legislation from (i) non-Governmental organisations including voluntary and charitable groups, (ii) commercial interests, companies and trade organisations and (iii) other categories; and if he will make a statement. [136601]

Mr. Byers: The Government have received a large number of representations, mostly from individuals and non-governmental organisations, but also from businesses and business organisations, in the period in question. Representations have supported proposals for new strategic export control legislation and called for that legislation to be introduced soon. A number of representations have raised different aspects of strategic export controls, including arms trafficking and brokering and licensed production overseas. The Government have undertaken a thorough review of proposals for new strategic export control legislation on the basis of the White Paper (Cm 3989) published in July 1998. We shall announce the outcome of that review shortly. In addition I have announced that the proposed new legislation will include a system of licensing for arms trafficking and brokering. This is a significant change and we are currently considering the details of this. We intend to announce the outcome in the near future.

Small Businesses

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action is being taken to help people who are (a) aged 50 and over and (b) aged under 25 years, and who are not working to set up their own businesses. [136698]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 7 November 2000]: The Small Business Service was launched in April this year to provide information, advice, or access to experts, on all aspects of running a business. The services are available to anyone wishing to set up or run their own business irrespective of age.

In addition, the SBS is working with PRIME (The Prince's Initiative for Mature Enterprise) with a view to supporting that organisation's plans to enhance access to finance for unemployed over 50s seeking to start in business.

The Government also continue to provide support for programmes and initiatives to help the creation of an enterprise culture in the country. This includes support for schemes such as Young Enterprise which aim to double to 200,000 the number of pupils benefiting from enterprise courses in our schools and colleges.

Consumer Policy Institute

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with the Consumer Policy Institute. [137257]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 7 November 2000]: Last June I met with several members of the National Federation of Consumer Groups to discuss their future plans. One of their action points was the creation of the Consumer Policy Institute.

Professor Geoffrey Woodroffe, who leads the Institute, was present at that meeting and gave me a briefing on the aims of the Institute. I understand that the Institute has now been established and wish it well in the future.

Broadband Telecommunications

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he plans to put in place to limit potential interference from broadband telecommunications systems, such as an asymmetric digital subscriber line; and if he will make a statement. [138155]

Ms Hewitt: ADSL technology will allow broadband data services into people's homes and offices over the local telephone network. It is an important technology in the development of the information society and e-commerce. However, because it operates at radio frequencies over cables which may become unbalanced and hence radiate, there is a risk of interference to medium wave broadcasting and to some aeronautical and other services. There is a difficult balance to strike as we want DSL and other similar broadband technologies to be deployable widely, but we cannot allow undue interference.

My Department has therefore been consulting over a standard to be put in place to limit interference from these technologies. Taking due account of the various representations—and they have been strong on all sides—we have decided to adopt the limits in the so-called February draft standard published by the Radiocommunications Agency (RA). I will be making Regulations to implement this standard in due course. Safety of life radio services will be protected as the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 allows immediate close down of interference sources where the Regulations are breached. Officials will also be putting in place a complaints procedure for domestic consumers experiencing broadcast interference from DSL. This procedure will be worked up in consultation with the Radio Authority, the BBC and the radio industry. The Director General for Telecommunications proposes to place an obligation on the operators of DSL systems to take all reasonable steps to remedy any interference caused.

The Government believe that this balanced package will provide a high level of protection to existing spectrum users while allowing deployment of new technology without undue constraint. We will undertake a review in two years—less if necessary—to assess whether the level in the standard has been appropriately set and to decide the timing of any future reviews. We will make the standard tougher if necessary. The review itself will cover the number of unresolved complaints. Further research is being undertaken by the RA on the cumulative effects of DSL as it rolls out and this will further inform our review.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the total cost is of the projects approved under the Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation for (a) waste incineration, (b) offshore wind, (c) onshore wind, (d) solar power and (e) barriers; and if he will make a statement. [137395]

Mrs. Liddell: No payment is made under the Non Fossil Fuel Obligation (NFFO) until approved projects are commissioned.

Total project costs and costs to the Fossil Fuel Levy in the year to August 2000 for commissioned projects in these technologies were:

£ million

	Total costs	Costs to Levy
(a) Waste Incineration	22.3	10.1
(b) Offshore Wind	Nil	Nil
(c) Onshore Wind	13.5	7.0
(d) Solar Power	Nil	Nil
(e) Tidal Barriers	Nil	Nil

No projects relating to solar power or tidal barriers have been approved under NFFO. One project relating to offshore wind has been approved under NFFO, but no expenditure under NFFO has yet arisen.

There will be no further NFFO rounds as the Government plan to impose a new renewables obligation on all electricity suppliers, but existing contracts will be protected.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what position Her Majesty's Government have adopted on the definition of renewable energy being negotiated for the European Union Draft Renewable Energy Directive; and if he will make a statement. [137393]

Mrs. Liddell: The Draft Directive on the promotion of electricity from renewable energy sources in the internal electricity market proposes an indicative UK target of 10 per cent. of electricity consumption to be generated from renewable energy sources by 2010. This indicative target is in line with the UK's policy as described in "The Renewables Obligation Preliminary Consultation" document, published on 5 October 2000. In negotiations the Government's position is to ensure that the Directive's definition of renewable energy is wide enough for the UK to achieve the Directive's indicative target within the UK's policy framework for renewables and the detailed mechanisms for the obligation on which we are currently consulting.

Pirate Radio Transmitters

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list for each of the last five years, in respect of interference with aeronautical radio communications by pirate radio transmitters, (a) the number of reported cases, (b) the number of prosecutions brought by the Radio Communications Agency and (c) the sentences applicable to such offences; and if he will make a statement. [137572]

Ms Hewitt: The Department's Radiocommunications Agency take seriously any interference to authorised radio communications. Where the interference has implications for the safety of life the Agency has a target to respond within 24 hours.

Reports of interference to aeronautical radio communications are not usually specific as to the source. However, the Agency has seized pirate radio transmitters identified as being the source of interference to aeronautical radio communications on the following number of occasions in each of the past five years.

Year	Numbers
1998	10

[1] To date

The number of persons prosecuted in each of the past five years where there was evidence that the pirate radio station had caused such interference is as follows:

[1] To date

The maximum penalty for the use of radio transmitting equipment contrary to the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 is a fine of £5,000 and six months' imprisonment on conviction at the magistrates court and an unlimited fine and two years' imprisonment on conviction at the Crown court. In both instances the court can also order the forfeit of anything used in the commission of the offence. In 1999 one of those convicted was sentenced to 28 days' imprisonment and this year two of those convicted were sentenced to six months' and four months' imprisonment respectively.

Road Fuel

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he is providing to ensure continuing availability of road fuels in the event of disrupted supplies. [137529]

Mrs. Liddell: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced on 29 September that members of the Fuel Supply Task Force had signed a Memorandum of Understanding to put in place more robust systems to avoid disruption of fuel supplies. He further told the House on 2 November that the Task Force was putting in place measures aimed at ensuring, in the event of future disruption, the delivery of fuel to petrol stations, with priority for essential users; better preparation for disruption by local authorities and other essential users; the protection of food depots and other potential targets and the keeping open of major roads.

The Task Force continues to meet to discuss whether further measures need to be taken to ensure that the disruption caused by the recent protests is not repeated.

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes will be made to the Departmental Expenditure Limit and running costs for his Department, British Trade International, the Office of Fair Trading, the Office of Telecommunications, and the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets. [138153]

Mr. Byers: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the voted element of the Departmental Expenditure Limit for the Department of Trade and Industry will be increased by £87,800,000 from £3,503,716,000 to £3,591,516,000, the non-voted element of the Departmental Expenditure Limit will be increased by £11,885,000 from £118,752,000 to £130,637,000. In addition and the gross running costs limit will be increased by £11,913,000 from £401,002,000 to £412,915,000.

The net provision of Class IX, Vote 1 will be increased by £87,799,000, which results from:

(i) the take up of end-year flexibility of £64,154,000 comprising £7,654,000 for running costs and £56,500,000 for current expenditure, of which £11,500,000 will be added to the provision for Enemy Property and £45,000,000 to that for Nuclear Decommissioning;

(ii) additional provision of £12,500,000 for compensation to distant water trawlermen;

(iii) additional provision of £25,000,000 from the Government's Capital Modernisation Fund, of which £15,000,000 is for the Small Business Service Gateway project and £10,000,000 for the Information Society Initiative getting SMEs on line project;

(iv) additional provision of £3,810,000 from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund of which £3,410,000 will be added to the running costs provision for Section D and £400,000 to that for Section G;

(v) the transfer of £17,215,000 in gross provision and £15,000 in appropriations in aid to British Trade International, (Class IX, Vote 4) in respect of the programme expenditure of Invest UK, formerly the Invest in Britain Bureau;

(vi) the transfer of £1,166,000 to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, (Class III, Vote 1) in respect of the administrative costs of the Regional Development Agencies and the London Development Agency;

(vii) the transfer of £536,000 in gross provision to the Innovation budget from the National Assembly for Wales, (Class XIV, Vote 1);

(viii) the transfer of £165,000 in programme expenditure from the Home Office (Class IV, Vote 1) to the Innovation budget for crime reduction activities;

(ix) the appropriation in aid of receipts from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, (Class X, Vote 2) of £8,500,000 in respect of the Farm Business Advice Service and an equivalent increase in the gross provision of the programme budget of the Small Business Service who will be responsible for delivering this service;

(x) an increase of £22,545,000 in the gross expenditure provision for the Radiocommunications Agency, which is offset by an equivalent increase in the appropriations in aid provision;

(xi) other movements between sections of the Vote.

The net provision of Class IX, Vote 2 will be increased by £1,000, which results from:

(i) the take up of end-year flexibility of £11,850,000 for the Science Enterprise Challenge Scheme comprising £2,500,000 for capital expenditure and £9,350,000 for current expenditure. This is offset by a reduction in voted capital expenditure of £11,884,000 in respect of the Joint Infrastructure Fund;

(ii) running costs transfers of £110,000 from the Home Office, (Class IV, Vote 1) to fund a foresight panel on crime reduction and £75,000 to the Department of Health, (Class II, Vote 2) for the Office of Science and Technology's share of the Human Genetic Commission's Secretariat.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the voted element of the Departmental Expenditure Limit for British Trade International, Class IX, Vote 4, will be increased by £18,233,000 from £67,410,000 to £85,643,000. This increase in net provision results from:

(i) the take up of end-year flexibility entitlements of £1,033,000 for current expenditure, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury in Table 7 of the 1999–2000 Public Expenditure White Paper (Cm 4812);

(ii) the transfer from the DTI Programmes and Administration Vote (Class IX, Vote 1) of £17,215,000 in gross provision and £15,000 in appropriations in aid in respect of the programme expenditure of Invest UK, formerly the Invest in Britain Bureau, whose transfer to British Trade International from the Department of Trade and Industry was announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade on 24 May 2000, Official Report, columns 522–523.

British Trade International is the joint responsibility of the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. In addition, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the Departmental Expenditure Limit for the Office of Fair Trading, Class IX, Vote 8, will be increased by £6,824,000 from £25,676,000 to £32,500,000 and the gross running costs limit will be increased by £5,024,000 from £25,490,000 to £30,514,000.

These changes result from:

(i) the take up of end-year flexibility of £854,000;

(ii) additional provision of £1,800,000 for work arising from the implementation of EC directives on Distance Selling and Injunctions, and Unfair Contract Terms;

(iii) additional provision of £450,000 for changes to work on Mergers;

(iv) additional provision of £750,000 for the review of the Professions;

(v) additional provision of £1,800,000 for appropriations in aid resulting from the shortfall in notification fees arising from the Competition Act 1998;

(vi) the transfer of £1,070,000 from the baseline of the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate in respect of the payment of rent for Fleetbank House;

(vii) additional provision of £100,000 from the Cabinet Office Modernisation Fund in support of diversity awareness training for the Office of Fair Trading and the Office of Telecommunications.

In addition, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary token Supplementary Estimate, the Departmental Expenditure Limit for the Office of Telecommunications, Class IX, Vote 9, will be increased by £1,000 from £2,400,000 to £2,401,000 and the gross running costs limit will be increased by £559,000 from £12,589,000 to £13,148,000. These changes result from partial take up of end-year flexibility carry forward of £179,000 and an increase of £380,000 to address increased regulatory action. These increases will be offset by a compensating increase in appropriations in aid.

Also, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the Departmental Expenditure Limit for the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets, Class IX, Vote 10 will be increased by £671,000 from £1,000 to £672,000. The increase reflects the net effect of additional provision for expenditure on the introduction of the New Electricity Trading Arrangements (NETA) and relocation costs, largely offset by higher VAT refunds and increased receipts from energy companies. The net increase represents the take up of end-year flexibility. The gross running costs limit for the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets will be increased by £13,300,000 from £62,115,000 to £75,415,000. The increase reflects the increase in expenditure on NETA, partially offset by the increase in VAT refunds.

All of the above increases will either be offset by transfers or charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of (1) the effect of changes in heating oil costs on Government targets to reduce fuel poverty; [136919]

(2) the role played by heating fuel oil costs in progress made on tackling fuel poverty. [137104]

Mrs. Liddell: The latest available figures[1] suggest that about 3 per cent. of households in England have oil-fired central heating. The figures also indicate that 2 per cent. (around 80,000 households) of those in fuel poverty in 1996 had oil-fired central heating. In the four years from the second quarter of 1996 to the second quarter of 2000, there has been a 9.25 per cent. rise in real terms in the price of heating oils.

The Government recognise that recent increases in heating oil prices may have adversely affected those households using this fuel, including those in rural or isolated areas. While the numbers affected are relatively small, compared to the total number in fuel poverty, the Government recognise that fluctuations in prices can take people in and out of fuel poverty.

The Government will be consulting on its draft strategy to tackle fuel poverty later this year.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of UK electricity was provided by nuclear power stations for each of the last 10 years. [137216]

Mrs. Liddell: Nuclear power stations accounted for the following percentages of electricity supplied in the UK by major power producers:

Year	Percentage from nuclear
1991	22
1992	24
1994	28
1996	28
1999	28

Oil Licensing Agreements

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the factors underlying his decision to announce a further round of oil licensing agreements. [137174]

Mrs. Liddell: The decision to announce the 19th round of offshore petroleum licensing was taken having regard to the United Kingdom's future energy needs and the investment and employment benefits that would derive from the development of any petroleum discoveries.

The Secretary of State will consider and apply the EU Habitats directive when deciding whether to grant licences in the round. Licence awards will be based on an applicant meeting certain geological, technical and environmental criteria. The results of an extensive public consultation on an assessment of the impact of oil and gas activities on the marine environment of the area of the UK Continental Shelf between the Shetland and Faroes Islands will be taken into account in any decision-making.

Industrial Diseases (Compensation Claims)

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases of (a) emphysema, (b) pneumoconiosis, (c) other respiratory illness and (d) vibration white finger claims (i) have been processed and (ii) are outstanding; and what assessment he has made of the length of time needed to complete the outstanding claims. [136960]

Mrs. Liddell: The Department has received over 124,000 claims for chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), which encompasses all regulatory disease claims, excluding those made solely for pneumoconiosis. Claims for COPD are continuing to come in at a rate of around 1,000 a week. In addition the Department has registered nearly 113,000 claims for vibration white finger (VWF).

Claims for pneumoconiosis are made under a British Coal scheme which commenced in 1979, for which the Department assumed responsibility in April 1998. Under the scheme nearly 86,000 claims have been received.

Of these, 3,300 claims for COPD; 85,600 claims for pneumoconiosis; and 17,500 claims for VWF have been settled in full and final settlement (includes both offers and denials).

Not all aspects of compensation for COPD and VWF are settled—some are being negotiated with the solicitors representing the claimants, and some are with the Court. The Department is therefore not able to offer full and final settlements in many cases, but wherever possible, we are making interim payments. Some 22,300 interim payments have been made to COPD claimants, and a further 17,500 interim payments have been made to VWF claimants.

In total the Department has made payments totalling nearly £260 million to COPD and VWF claimants. In addition, lump sum payments of over £137 million have been made under the British Coal scheme to pneumoconiosis claimants—some claimants also receive weekly payments.

Some 120,000 COPD claims and 94,000 VWF claims remain outstanding. Claims for pneumoconiosis are processed on a continuing basis and only 350 claims remain outstanding.

On COPD an original estimate of two to three years was given to assess all the existing claimants but this is kept under review in view of the escalating number of claims. We are giving priority to claims from those most old and ill, widows and those most likely (on the basis of initial testing) to have emphysema. If these claims were processed in the normal way through the courts it would take 10–15 years.

On vibration white finger, we aim to have carried out initial assessments on the existing claimants by the end of next year. A further assessment may be required for those claimants seeking compensation for loss of services but this is still under consideration.

EU Combustion Plants Directive

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has made to the European Commission concerning the EC directive on large combustion plants. [137551]

Ms Hewitt: My Department works closely with others, in particular the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, to ensure that business interests are properly factored into the development of policy on the protection of the environment, at both national and European levels. My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment has represented the views of Her Majesty's Government in the process of reaching a Common Position on the revision of this directive at the June meeting of the Environment Council.

TREASURY

Third-World Debt

16. Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations his Department has received about the alleviation of the debts of countries with a large number of HIV/AIDS cases. [135964]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government receive frequent representations on this issue which was discussed along with other pressing development concerns, for example at the recent meeting of Commonwealth Finance Ministers in Malta where I represented the UK.

Tragically HIV/AIDS is a serious problem, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa. In response the Government continue to press for faster, wider and deeper debt relief, are significantly increasing our aid spending and, as announced in the pre-Budget Report, we will be doing urgent work into ways to encourage the research and development of new vaccines for HIV/AIDS and the other major diseases so badly affecting developing countries.

Aggregates Tax (Glass Industry)

17. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the aggregates tax on the glass industry. [135965]

Mr. Timms: Since the sand used in the manufacture of glass will be relieved from the levy, I do not expect it to have an adverse impact on the glass industry. Indeed, the levy will encourage use of waste glass as an alternative to primary aggregate.

Liquefied Petroleum Gas

18. Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his Department's plans to encourage the use of LPG fuel. [135966]

Mr. Timms: We support the use of liquid petroleum gas because of its environmental benefits over petrol and diesel. We do so in two ways—first, a substantially lower rate of duty on LPG, the rate being frozen again for next year; and, second, support for the Powershift programme, helping people to convert their vehicles to LPG.

Employment

19. Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of full employment. [135967]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The modern definition of full employment is the Government's aim of employment opportunity for all. The Government's long-term economic ambition is that by the end of the decade there will be at least three quarters of the working age population in employment. Macroeconomic stability is a prerequisite to achieving this aim, combined with microeconomic policies to ensure an effective, secure transition from welfare into work.

The Chancellor announced in Chapter 4 of pre-Budget Report 2000 a further range of measures, which build on existing employment programmes in order to reach full employment.

Business Taxation

20. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from representative organisations of commerce and industry about his policies on business taxation. [135968]

Dawn Primarolo: We have received a number of representations from business organisations on the pre-Budget Report and Budget, including the Confederation of British Industry, the British Chamber of Commerce and the Institute of Directors.

24. Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy for business taxation. [135975]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government's policies on business taxation are set out in the Financial Statements and Budget Statements, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

27. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the consequences for business of tax changes since 1997. [135978]

35. Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the additional taxes payable by businesses since May 1997. [135986]

Dawn Primarolo: All changes to the tax system are included in the relevant Budget Reports. These are available in the Library of the House.

Higher Rate Tax

21. Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much an increase in top-rate tax from 40p to 50p in the pound would raise if that were applied to those earning over £250,000 per annum. [135969]

Dawn Primarolo: The full-year yield from raising the top rate of income tax to 50 per cent. on taxable income of over £250,000 is £1.5 billion in 2001–02.

The estimate is based on the Survey of Personal Incomes and is consistent with the March 2000 Budget.

Industrial Tribunals

22. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on negotiations with the Society of Registration Officers regarding its access to industrial tribunals in unfair dismissal cases. [135973]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Current legal proceedings may conclude that this access is available. If this does not transpire, the Government are committed to making such access available. The Registrar General will pursue an Order under the Employment Relations Act 1999 if this proves necessary to give registration officers access.

Public Spending

23. Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to relate the level of public spending to economic growth. [135974]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Government's expenditure projections are set out in Table B13 of the pre-Budget Report.

Unemployment

25. Mr. Khabra: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the revenue consequences of the changes in unemployment levels since May 1997. [135976]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The extent to which higher employment affects Government revenues will depend on a number of assumptions, in particular the extent to which higher employment reflects permanently higher output growth. Research published by the Treasury indicates that a 1 per cent. increase in output relative to trend increases the ratio of Government receipts to GDP by about 0.2 per cent. after one year. This is equivalent to an increase in receipts of about £6 billion.

Low Pay

26. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to increase the take-home pay of those in low paid work. [135977]

Dawn Primarolo: Measures introduced during this Parliament have provided significant extra help for those in low-paid work.

The National Minimum Wage, introduced in April 1999, is estimated to have increased the wages of 1.5 million low-paid workers.

The new 10p starting rate of income tax has halved the marginal tax rate for 1.9 million low-paid working people, and reforms to employee National Insurance Contributions mean that one million people no longer have to pay NICs.

Through the Working Families Tax Credit, the Government are giving additional support to over 1.1 million working families with children who are now receiving on average £30 more per week compared to old Family Credit.

These measures demonstrate the Government's commitment to increase the incomes of people in low-paid work and to ensure that work pays more than benefit. By the end of this Parliament, a family on half average earnings—£12,500—and with two children will be £2,600 a year better off as a result of the tax and benefit reforms.

Living Standards

28. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on changes in household living standards since April. [135979]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Living standards for a single-earner family on average earnings with two children are expected to increase by 10 per cent. in real terms over the Parliament. For a single-earner family on half average earnings with two children, living standards have increased by 18 per cent. in real terms over the last year.

Fuel Prices

29. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce the impact of increased fuel prices for people on low incomes and rural dwellers. [135980]

Mr. Timms: The Chancellor announced a package of measures in his pre-Budget Report which will be of benefit to both people on low incomes and those living in rural areas.

Pensioners (Savings Limit)

30. Helen Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his review of financial support for pensioners with special reference to the savings limits disregard. [135981]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government announced in the Budget that the savings limit in the Minimum Income Guarantee will double next April from £3,000 to £6,000. Today the Secretary of State for Social Security is publishing a consultation document outlining plans for a Pension Credit from 2003 to reward low and modest income pensioners who have worked hard to save for their retirement.

Family Taxation

31. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the net change to tax on families payable in this Parliament as a result of his Budget measures so far. [135982]

Dawn Primarolo: As a result of personal tax and benefit measures introduced during this Parliament, by April 2001, on average families with children will be £850 a year better off. The direct tax burden on a single-earner family on average earnings with two children is expected to fall from 20.9 per cent. in 1997–98 to 18.6 per cent. in 2001–02—it's lowest level since 1972.

Disabled Person's Tax Credit

32. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in the north-west have claimed the Disabled Person's Tax Credit since October 1999. [135983]

Dawn Primarolo: The number of individuals and families in the north-west in receipt of the Disabled Person's Tax Credit at the end of August 2000 is provisionally estimated at 3,900. This compares with 2,800 in receipt of the Disability Working Allowance at its peak, in July 1999.

Fiscal Intervention

33. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost to the UK of the intervention to purchase euros and the additional purchase of euros by his instruction to the Bank of England to sell gold. [135984]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The $2.1 billion proceeds from the gold auctions held to date have been reinvested in interest-bearing foreign currency assets broadly in the proportions 40 per cent. dollars; 40 per cent. euros; and 20 per cent. yen.

The only intervention undertaken, since the euro was launched, was on 22 September 2000 when 85 million was purchased against sterling.

To provide a short-term snapshot of the value of these investments would not be meaningful as it would reflect distortions arising from short-term fluctuations in asset prices and currencies.

Pre-Budget Report

34. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what impact his proposals in the pre-Budget statement will have on the incomes of women and children. [135985]

Dawn Primarolo: As a result of personal tax and benefit measures introduced over this Parliament, by April 2001:

on average, women will be £400 a year better off, compared to £290 a year for all individuals; families with children will be £850 a year better off;

a family with two young children on income support will be £1,500 a year better off; a lone parent with two young children in work on £12,500 a year will be £2,600 better off.

Some of the major changes that affect women and children are:

the introduction of the Working Families Tax Credit, which is already helping around 1.1 million families; changes to the National Insurance Contributions system which will remove around 750,000 women and 250,000 men from NICs liability by 2001–02; a 26 per cent. real terms increase in Child Benefit over the Parliament.

Payroll Giving

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to date of the give-as-you-earn scheme; and what estimate he has made of the likely cost over the next three years. [135950]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The cost of the Payroll Giving scheme since it was introduced in 1986 has been published in Inland Revenue Statistics on an annual basis. The total cost of the scheme up to April 2000 was £53 million. The estimated cost until April 2003 is around £60 million.

The Economic Secretary launched a £2 million promotional campaign in October this year to encourage more employers and employees to become involved in Payroll Giving. We aim to double donations by April 2003 to more than £60 million a year.

Family Incomes

Dr. George Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what change there has been in the income of an average working family (a) before and (b) after tax since May 1997. [135951]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The before-tax income of a single-earner family on average earnings with two children is expected to increase by 6 per cent. in real terms over the Parliament. After tax, it is expected to increase by 10 per cent. in real terms.

Tax Credits

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the rates and thresholds to the Working Families Tax Credit and the Disabled Person's Tax Credit will be from April 2001. [138179]

Dawn Primarolo: The main WFTC and DPTC rates and income thresholds will be increased in line with indexation from April 2001. There will be further increases aimed at helping disabled people. The information requested is contained in the table.

Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) and Disabled Person's Tax Credit (DPTC)

£ per week

	2000–01	2001–02
WFTC—basic tax credit	53.15	54.00
DPTC—single person basic tax credit	55.15	56.05
DPTC—lone parent/couple basic tax credit	84.90	86.25
30-hour tax credit (for both WFTC and DPTC)	11.25	11.45
Child tax credits (for both WFTC and DPTC)
Under 16	25.60	26.00
16–18	26.35	26.75
Disabled Child Tax Credit (for both WFTC and DPTC)	22.25	30.00
Enhanced Disability Tax Credit (lone parent/couple)	n/a	16.00
Enhanced Disability Tax Credit (single person)	n/a	11.05
Enhanced Disability Tax Credit (child)	n/a	11.05
WFTC income threshold	91.45	92.90
DPTC income threshold—single person	71.10	72.25
DPTC income threshold—lone parent/couple	91.45	92.90

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to his Department's departmental expenditure limits and running costs limits for 2000–01. [138054]

Dawn Primarolo: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates for Class XVI, Vote 1 (HM Treasury) and Class XVI, Vote 3 (HM Treasury: Office of Government Commerce), the Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £17,230,000 from £246,793,000 to £264,023,000.

The increase for Class XVI, Vote 1 (HM Treasury) is the net effect of the take up of end-year flexibility (EYF) of £1,000,000 comprising £980,000 for other current provision and £20,000 for capital, and provides for the drawing of £1,300,000 from the Capital Modernisation Fund for the continuing costs associated with the setting up for Partnerships UK; and an increase in running costs of £541,000 to draw down the monies allocated from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund. The running costs limit for HM Treasury will accordingly be increased by £541,000 from £63,523,000 to £64,064,000.

The increase for Class XVI, Vote 3 (HM Treasury: Office of Government Commerce) is the net effect of the take up of EYF for PACE of £15,000,000 comprising £14,175,000 other current provision and £825,000 for running costs for expenditure related to the disposal of vacant property; the take up of EYF for CCTA of £797,000 comprising £686,000 other current provision and £111,000 for capital due to costs related to increased business; an increase in running costs of £325,000 to draw down the monies allocated from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund for OGC Headquarters; and a reduction in other current provision to record two transfers, of £663,000 for the cost of ownership of Harmsworth House to Class IV, Vote 3 (Charity Commission), and of £1,070,000 for the cost of ownership of Fleetbank House to Class IX, Vote 8 (Office of Fair Trading). As a result of take up of £825,000 EYF and drawing down £325,000 from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund, the running costs limit for HM Treasury Office of Government Commerce will accordingly be increased by £1,150,000 from £23,402,000 to £24,552,000.

The increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mortgage Repayments

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost to the average household in mortgage repayments were current interest rates at the average level between 1992 and 1997. [135971]

Miss Melanie Johnson: If mortgage interest rates were now at their average level between 1992 and 1997, the average mortgage holder would be paying about £480 more a year in mortgage interest than they currently are.

Fuel Duties

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on the level of fuel duties; and if he will make a statement. [135970]

Mr. Timms: The Government have received representation from many different organisations and groups as well as a large number of letters from members of the public.

All were carefully considered in the run up to yesterday's pre-Budget Statement.

Macdougall Report

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the conclusions of the Macdougall report regarding the share of GDP to be raised and spent centrally in any currency zone. [136416]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Agenda 2000 agreements confirmed that a ceiling of 1.27 per cent. of Community GNP would continue to apply for member states' contributions to the EC budget and this will remain.

Tax Definitions

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will define the terms (a) tax harmonisation and (b) tax co-ordination. [136414]

Dawn Primarolo: The only reference to tax harmonisation in the European Communities Treaty is in Article 93 which provision formed part of the revised Treaty under the Single European Act signed in 1986.

A reference to co-ordinated action to tackle harmful tax competition was contained in the ECOFIN Council conclusions of 1 December 1997. These conclusions followed a period of discussion initiated by the Commission at the Verona informal ECOFIN in April 1996.

Endowment Policies

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of (a) how many endowment policies sold on the basis that they would on completion pay off home loans will now not do so and (b) the total shortfall; what steps he is taking to address this issue; and if he will make a statement. [136973]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The selling and marketing of endowment policies is regulated by the Financial Services Authority (FSA). In a progress report published on 3 October, the FSA estimated that some 60 per cent. of the 11 million endowment policies in force might not meet their targets. The total value of the policies in force, and the projected shortfall, are not held centrally.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his latest estimate is of the number of recipients of the Working Families Tax Credit. [137388]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer my right hon. Friend to my answer given to the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 26 October 2000, Official Report, column 196W.

Capital Gains Indexation

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 28 July 2000, Official Report, column 1016W, on capital gains indexation, if he will revise his estimate (a) giving yields for the next five financial years assuming that asset values are constant in real terms, and (b) giving yields for the next five financial years assuming that retirement relief is reintroduced at its previous level and asset values are constant in real terms. [136296]

Dawn Primarolo: Consistent with the assumptions of the March 2000 Budget forecast, the net revenue yield from re-introducing indexation and abolishing taper is estimated to be £400 million for the first year, or £350 million if retirement relief were reinstated also, most of which would be received in the following year. Further information in the form requested on the yield for subsequent years can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Alcohol and Tobacco Fraud Review

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which recommendations of the Alcohol and Tobacco Fraud Review have not been fully implemented. [135877]

Dawn Primarolo: Sixty-four of the recommendations have been implemented, including 14 which have been implemented by other means than that directly envisaged in the report, and three of which have been implemented in part; four will not be progressed and work is continuing on a further 23. A schedule reporting progress on each of the recommendations has been placed in the Library of the House.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

De-trunking Programme

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what additional resources the Government will allocate to local authorities from 2003 following the Government's de-trunking programme. [136428]

Mr. Hill: De-trunking of non-core routes will be phased over a number of years with the first significant transfers taking place in 2001–02. We are committed to ensuring a fair transfer of resources from the Highways Agency to local authorities, which will take on responsibility for de-trunked roads. Arrangements have been agreed with the Local Government Association for ensuring such a transfer takes place. This will involve the making of special grants for routine maintenance and issue of supplementary credit approvals for capital maintenance when the roads are actually transferred. These arrangements will operate pending the outcome of the review of local government finance for which options were set out in our green paper "Modernising Local Government Finance" published on 19 September.

Street Lighting

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number and percentage of street lighting columns that are unsafe and require replacement within the next 12 months. [136426]

Mr. Hill: DETR are aware that, of the 5 million street lighting columns in England, 27 per cent. (1.3 million) are more than 30 years old now. However, the Department does not currently have sufficient information to determine the number of columns which are unsafe.

Local authorities have agreed that a national condition survey for street lighting should be introduced, and that information from this should be used to compile a national inventory. Progress on this is still at an early stage although local authority representatives have agreed to submit proposals to DETR.

The Highways Agency consider that current funding levels are sufficient to allow them to maintain the condition of the trunk road network at a level where there is no backlog of maintenance (either for structural maintenance or for street lighting).

Road Noise (A5)

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the A5 at Wibtoft on the Warwickshire and Leicestershire border to be resurfaced to reduce traffic noise. [136284]

Mr. Hill: The A5 at Wibtoft was resurfaced about five years ago. I would not expect resurfacing to be required until around 2006. As announced previously, lower noise surfaces will be used for virtually all future surfacing work on trunk roads.

Flooding (Lewes)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make available funds towards the repair of listed buildings and other buildings in the conservation area of Lewes affected by the recent flooding. [136569]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 6 November 2000]: Emergency financial assistance is available for local authorities under the Bellwin scheme to help with uninsurable clear-up costs following a disaster or emergency in their area which involves destruction of, or danger to, life or property.

Government compensation is not generally available to private household or businesses following storms and flooding. These are insurable risks, and successive Governments have taken the view that to underwrite insurable costs would remove any incentive for people to take out appropriate insurance cover and would penalise those who had acted prudently.

Bellwin schemes are intended to prevent an undue burden falling on local taxpayers as the result of local authorities taking immediate action to safeguard life or property, or to prevent suffering or severe inconvenience, in their area or among its inhabitants. Grant is normally paid at a rate of 85 per cent. on authorities' qualifying expenditure above a threshold but for the present emergency grant will be paid at 100 per cent. of amounts above the threshold. The threshold is the provision that a prudent authority might reasonably be expected to make for contingencies and emergencies (approximately 0.2 per cent. of its revenue budget).

In the case of the recent flooding the following adaptations to the Bellwin scheme will apply:

assistance under Bellwin will be available for all authorities making valid claims resulting from the October/November floods and storms;

Government support above the threshold will be increased from 85 per cent. to 100 per cent. but there is no change to the 0.2 per cent. threshold or to the definition of eligible costs;

valid claims will be settled within 15 working days of receipt by the Department of a valid grant claim form; claims for payments in advance of audit reports being received by the Department may be made; and claims for grant of less than £10,000 will be accepted on presentation of details of expenditure certified by the Chief Financial Officer and will not require a separate audit report.

Lewes District Council inquired about assistance under the Bellwin scheme the day following the initial floods. We are ready to trigger that assistance and officials await the detailed claim. We will consider all applications speedily and sympathetically against the criteria that apply in these circumstances.

Hatfield Derailment

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for how long the Health and Safety Executive has required its buffet carriage to be left on the railway at Hatfield. [137204]

Mr. Hill: The Health and Safety Executive did not require the GNER buffet carriage to be left on the accident site at Hatfield. Inspectors gave instructions to Railtrack Ltd. on 19 October that the damaged carriage should be taken to Crewe for examination along with the other coaches and locomotive.

Deprivation Indices

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the index of deprivation by ward as it relates to (a) the West Midlands area and (b) Coventry, South; and what plans there are to address the inequalities highlighted. [136578]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 6 November 2000]: The Indices of Deprivation 2000 (ID2000) revises, extends and updates the 1998 Index of Local Deprivation. It is based on 33 ward level indicators of deprivation covering six domains: low income, employment deprivation, education and training deprivation, poor health and disability, poor housing and poor geographical access to services. Because it is based on ward level information it is more effective than previous indices in identifying pockets of deprivation across England and is a more effective means of targeting help at the most deprived areas. The indices show that there are 69 wards in the West Midlands in the 10 per cent. most deprived wards in England, of which five wards are in Coventry and two wards (St. Michael's and Binley and Willenhall) are in Coventry, South. The indices are considered to be the best means of measuring area deprivation currently, but will be kept under review and revised when significantly better information for small areas becomes available.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the recent deprivation indices produced by his Department, by ward. [136699]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 7 November 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to him earlier today, column 345W.

Damascus House

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Government Office for London will make a decision on the planning application for Damascus House, Mill Hill. [136940]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Secretary of State's decision on whether he should call in the planning application for his own determination is at an advanced stage and will be issued shortly.

Oil Industry

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations his Department made to the Department of Trade and Industry regarding the recent decision to hold a new round of oil licensing. [137173]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My Department will be making representations in due course in response to the consultation paper issued by the Department of Trade and Industry on 25 October.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 451–56W, concerning the single regeneration budget, if he will provide details of the geographical area covered by each bid. [137117]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 7 November 2000]: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

National Air Traffic Services

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the timetable is for developments in the National Air Traffic Services PPP from 3 November until the completion of the process. [137507]

Mr. Mullin: The Government announced the three consortia to go forward to the next stage of the bidding process on 3 November. These three bidders for the role of Strategic Partner in the NATS PPP will have until early next year to prepare final and binding bids. The Government will then evaluate these bids with a view to selecting a preferred bidder. Subject to the passage of the Transport Bill, the Government's firm intention is to have the PPP in place in the spring of 2001.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria Raytheon failed to satisfy in their bid to be considered as the strategic partner under the National Air Traffic Services PPP. [137506]

Mr. Mullin: Raytheon's indicative bid to be considered as Strategic Partner in the NATS PPP was submitted to the Government on a confidential basis. As such it is not appropriate for the Government to release details of the content of that bid. All bids received were evaluated against a comprehensive set of evaluation criteria that were made available to bidders in the tender documentation. DETR officials and its advisers have subsequently discussed the evaluation exercise and the reasons behind its decision not to accept the indicative offer submitted by Raytheon with the company.

The Government have in the past publicly stated that their firm intention was to select three bidders from those who submitted indicative offers to be taken forward to the next stage of the bidding process. That is what the Government have done and we announced our shortlist on 3 November 2000.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide an analysis of the component expenditure underlying the projected investment of £1,300 million required over 10 years for National Air Traffic Services. [137504]

Mr. Mullin: The Government do not make forecasts for NATS' capital expenditure. Earlier this year NATS produced its first ten year investment plan, for the period 2000–10, and it is still consulting with its customers on this document. The views of the successful bidder for the role as NATS' strategic partner will of course be taken into account, and the form, timing and appropriateness of the plan will be reviewed by the CAA before it is approved. The final plan will be issued around the middle of next year.

The Government believe that the Public/Private Partnership for NATS is the best way to deliver the investment needed. It will provide the additional management expertise to ensure that NATS' capital programme is achieved on time and on budget for the benefit of NATS' customers and for the Government as shareholder.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the incidents of NATS software and systems failure since 31 July 2000, indicating the duration and severity of their effects. [137528]

Mr. Mullin: The Flight Data Processing System (FDPS) at West Drayton has failed three times since 31 July. On none of these occasions was safety impaired. These failures were:

(i) On 12 August 2000, FDPS was suspended for one hour and thirteen minutes following the rejection of an incorrect flight plan. This resulted in the imposition of short term restrictions which necessitated some flights being held at London airports;

(ii) On 3 November 2000, FDPS was suspended for 17 minutes following the rejection of a flight plan. This resulted in six aircraft being delayed by 30 minutes; and

(iii) On 4 November 2000, controllers noted FDPS was failing to print accurate data strips for flights using Stansted. A decision was taken to revert to a previous version of the software known to be free of faults. This took 2 hours and 10 minutes to install successfully and during this period aircraft experienced delays of up to one hour.

NATS is planning to correct the failure in the software which caused the printing error as soon as possible. In spite of these failures, FDPS continues to perform well with both the performance and robustness of the system having been enhanced since the major failure on 17 June.

Area Cost Adjustment

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the basis of the funding formula for area cost adjustment in Kent for 2001–02 will be based on 1998 figures. [137377]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We have not yet taken a decision on whether to update the area cost adjustment to reflect the data from the 1999 New Earnings Survey. An announcement will be made in due course.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he plans to amend the calculation of the area cost adjustment to reflect data from the 1999 New Earnings Survey. [137531]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We have not yet taken a decision on whether to update the area cost adjustment to reflect the data from the 1999 New Earnings Survey. An announcement will be made in due course.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many responses he has received to the Consultation Paper on Telecommunication Mast Development; and from whom; [136857]

(2) if he will place copies of responses received to the Consultation Paper on Telecommunication Mast Development in the Library; [136858]

(3) when he will announce the action he proposes to take following the public consultation on telecommunication mast development. [136859]

Ms Beverley Hughes: By the end of the day, 7 November 2000, we had received 301 responses in total. Of these 45 were from members of the public; 230 were from local authorities and other public bodies; 18 were from mobile phone companies and associated businesses; and eight were from hon. Members. The Department is currently analysing the responses. We will announce any changes as soon as practicable. Copies of all responses, other than those where the respondent has indicated that the response is to be treated as confidential, will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Floods

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he was informed of the report into flood dangers by the Flood Hazard Research Centre at Middlesex University. [137400]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My Department received in July 2000 a copy of the "National appraisal of assets at risk from flooding and coastal erosion", a report produced for the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by Halcrow Maritime, HR Wallingford and the Flood Hazard Research Centre. It was circulated at the same time to all Regional Flood Defence Committee Chairmen, Regional Directors of the Environment Agency and Chief Executives of all local authorities in England.

The report presents a generalised overview of assets at risk in order to inform investment planning for flood and coastal defence. It demonstrates that some 10 per cent. of the population of England live within areas potentially at risk from flooding and property worth over £200 billion is also potentially at risk. It also confirms the value for money of past and present investment in flood and coastal defence but concludes that existing practices for undertaking and funding flood and coastal defence should be reappraised.

The results were used to inform the Spending Review 2000 and have been taken into account in the revision of the new draft planning guidance on development and flood risk in PPG25, which we issued for consultation in April 2000 and hope to publish in final form in December this year.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had in the past six months with Ministers of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food about flood defence; and if he will make statement. [137399]

Mr. Mullin: Policy responsibility for flood defence rests with my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has had several recent discussions with Ministers from MAFF and other Departments to consider how the country can be better placed to deal with extreme weather events.

"Are You Doing Your Bit" Campaign

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he plans to measure the success of the 'Are You Doing Your Bit' campaign; and if he will make a statement. [137396]

Mr. Meacher: Both quantitative and qualitative research, looking at awareness, motivation and actions by individuals, have been commissioned to measure the campaign's impact and inform the campaign's strategic approach.

Monthly tracking research, in particular, helps us to measure public reaction carefully. Recent findings have been very encouraging and demonstrate that the campaign is raising public awareness of environmental actions with attitudes and actions becoming more positive:

- nine out of 10 people recognise the campaign;
- seven out of 10 said that the advertising made them think they should be doing their bit; and
- intentions to act are being converted into action with over seven out of 10 saying they have started or increased the frequency of campaign actions in the last 12 months.

In addition to data from the more formal research activities outlined above, the campaign has also generated many successful partnerships with commercial organisations, with campaigners in similar fields, and with many local authorities. Feedback from these has been overwhelmingly positive, and the Government's commitment and approach are welcomed.

Flooding (Devon)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will respond to the request by Devon county council in respect of the exemption from Council Tax penalties sums given to the Environment Agency for flood defence works in excess of the relevant SSA. [137527]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We will reply to Devon's request of 6 November when we have had time to consider the implications, particularly with regard to the Local Government Finance Settlement. The timetable for the Local Government Finance Settlement is expected to be similar to last year's.

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will implement section 37 of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to require licensed taxi drivers to carry guide and hearing dogs in their taxis and to do so without charge. [138052]

Mr. Hill: I am pleased to announce that from 31 March 2001 all licensed taxi drivers in England and Wales will be under a duty to carry guide, hearing and other prescribed assistance dogs in their taxis and to do so without additional charge.

From 1 December 2000 local licensing authorities will be able to consider applications from taxi drivers and to issue certificates of exemption to those applicants who they consider merit a medical exemption.

I have laid before the House the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (Taxis) (Carrying of Guide Dogs etc.) (England and Wales) Regulations 2000. The Regulations prescribe three additional categories of dog to which Section 37 duties will also apply and deals with the notice which must be displayed by taxi drivers who are exempt on medical grounds from Section 37 duties.

Full guidance is being sent to all local licensing authorities and a leaflet to all licensed taxi drivers informing them of these new duties and the arrangements for medical exemption. Copies of these documents will be placed in the House Library.

I understand that the Scottish Executive will be introducing similar requirements for Scotland.

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans there are to amend his departmental expenditure limits and running costs limit for 2000–01. [138178]

Mr. Prescott: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates for Class III, Votes 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions' Departmental Expenditure Limits for 2000–01 will change as follows. All references to the take-up of end-year flexibility refer to the Public Expenditure 1999–2000 Provisional outturn White Paper presented to Parliament by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 18 July 2000 (Cm 4812).

(a) The DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit will be increased by £253,541,000 from £10,861,342,000 to £11,114,883,000. This increase reflects the net impact of a take-up of end-year flexibility of £142,703,000; net transfers into the DETR Main

Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit of £838,000 and a call on the DEL Reserve of £110,000,000. The changes are set out in greater detail as follows:

(i) The changes for Class III, Vote 1 are as follows: take-up of End-Year Flexibility of £80,728,000 is to be distributed between a range of established and new programmes, including: £17,589,000 for the Coalfields Regeneration Trust and £8,477,000 for the Coalfields Enterprise Fund; Housing Corporation (£13,173,000 for the Major Repairs Initiative and £224,000 for the Approved Development Programme); £5,300,000 for Disabled Facilities Grants; £400,000 for housing defects grants; £5,000,000 for regeneration projects facilitated by the Social Exclusion Unit; £1,000,000 for 'Supporting People' (housing projects); £3,772,000 for English Partnerships; £3,800,000 for Housing Action Trusts; £850,000 for Rural Development Commission wind up costs; £40,000 for Nature Conservancy Council pensions; £202,000 for Single Regeneration Budget (mainly Manchester regeneration); £3,825,000 for private housing renovation grants; Regional Development Agencies (£3,000,000 for redundant building grant and £500,000 for restructuring costs); £2,500,000 to support the coal industry (regeneration costs); £2,000,000 for Neighbourhood Wardens; £1,762,000 for the Countryside Agency (including costs of £62,000 relating to Dacre House); £1,372,000 for Urban Development Corporations post-wind up costs; £1,111,000 for housing research; £1,500,000 for the launch of a register of competent and reliable builders and £1,000,000 for other construction-related expenditure (Partners in Innovation and advisory work in connection with the effects of Turkish earthquakes); £587,000 for home improvement agencies and £225,000 for the home improvement agencies' co-ordinating body; £545,000 for home buying and selling; £94,000 for City Challenge; £400,000 for EC spatial planning; £155,000 for grants to voluntary bodies through the Special Grants Programme; £50,000 for Gypsy Sites Grant; £50,000 for local authority funding of pilots for lettings; £20,000 for the Joint National Conservation Committee internet website; and £250,000 to cover planning costs related to the demolition of Sandown Hall.

Additional calls on the DEL Reserve are required for Housing Corporation capital projects (£50,000,000) and for Regional Development Agencies (£60,000,000). A further net increase of £1,332,000 arises from the following inter-vote transfers; transfers into Class III, Vote 1 of £400,000 from Class VII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security, administration) to the Housing Corporation in respect of resettlement funding; £1,166,000 from Class IX, Vote 1 (Department of Trade and Industry: programmes and administration) for Regional Development Agencies' administration costs (including £70,000 specifically for the London Development Agency); £492,000 from Class IV, Vote 1 (Home Office administration, police, probation, immigration and other services, England and Wales) for Rough Sleepers Unit administered private sector grants; and transfers out of Class III, Vote 1 of £426,000 to Class III, Vote 3 for the Energy Saving Trust, and £300,000 to Class III, Vote 2 for minicab licensing.

(ii) The changes for Class III, Vote 2 are as follows: The take-up of end-year flexibility of: £53,824,000 for British Rail Grant (£18,000,000), civil aviation services (£15,000,000); multi modal studies (£3,000,000); Railtrack's Docklands Light Railway Royal Mint street claim (£14,500,000); London new year's eve celebration costs (£3,000,000); the transport statistics programme (£224,000); and the Mobility Unit (£100,000). A further net increase of £292,313,000 from the following inter-vote transfers: £278,325,000 from Class III, Vote 11 in respect of the Strategic Rail Authority; £14,390,000 from Class III, Vote 7 for multi modal studies (£10,000,000), road user charging (£1,500,000) and costs associated with London programmes which have transferred to Transport for London (£2,890,000). £300,000 from Class III, Vote 1 for the start up costs of minicab licensing; £150,000 from Class II Vote 1 (Department of Health) for Mobility Centres; £9,000 from Class IX, Vote 1 (Department of Trade and Industry) for VAT associated with the Framework 5 Helpline project; £784,000 to Class III, Vote 3 for various Environmental projects; £56,000 to Class IX, Vote 1 for the Framework 5 Helpline project; £6,000 to Class XII Vote 1 (Department of Social Security) for the National Listening Event for older people and £15,000 to the Class XIII, Vote 1 (Scottish Executive) for Scottish ports. An additional increase of £6,367,000 from non voted credit approvals for grant funding of the Sunderland Metro Main Extension (£5,417,000), World Squares (£650,000) and Mobility Centres (£300,000) partially offset by a transfer of £3,500,000 to non voted provision for Ports supplementary credit approvals.

(iii) The changes for Class III Vote 3 are as follows: The take- up of end-year flexibility of £6,936,000 for the implementation of the Climate Change Levy (£1,750,000), the Mersey Basin Campaign (£136,000), for the computer upgrade work for pollution emergency response services (£200,000), for costs arising from the implementation of the European Groundwater Directive (£2,000,000), clearance of the navigation backlog (£1,000,000), the Financial Management and Policy Review efficiency study (£100,000), for the British Waterways for the effective launch of The Waterways Trust (£500,000) and for an out of court settlement of a personal injury case (£1,250,000). A further net increase of £1,310,000 arises from the following transfers into the vote: transfers from Class III. Vote 2 for research work undertaken on the Environmental Efficiency Best Practice Programme (£647,000) and on the Environmental Protection research and monitoring (£137,000), transfer from Class III, Vote 1 for work to be undertaken by the Energy Saving Trust (£426,000) and a transfer from non-voted contaminated land Supplementary Credit Approvals for training work (£100,000). There is also a transfer provision to Class VIII, Vote 1 for contribution to Environmental Know How Fund (£2,000,000).

(iv) The changes to Class III, Vote 7 are as follows: A transfer of £14,390,000 to Class III Vote 2 made up of £10,000,000 for Multi-Modal Studies, £1,500,000 for Road User Charging Research and £2,890,000 settlement with the Greater London Authority. Draw down of £368,000 from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund, of which £348,000 is an increase in running costs provision and take-up of £200,000 of running costs end-year flexibility.

(v) The changes in Class III, Vote 8 are as follows: An increase of £630,000 which comprises: £303,000 transfer from Class IV, Vote 1 (Home Office Crime Reduction Programme) to support DVLA's vehicle crime reduction initiatives, an allocation of £385,000 from the Civil Service Reform Modernisation Fund and an increase in Appropriations in Aid of £58,000 offset by a reduction in CFERS to reflect the reclassification of sale of anonymised data receipts.

(vi) As a consequence of the changes to Class III, Vote 7 and 8, the DETR gross running cost limit has been increased by £1,226,000 from £700,928,000 to £702,154,000.

(vii) The change to Class III, Vote 11 is a transfer of £278,325,000 to Class III, Vote 2 for the establishment of the Strategic Rail Authority.

(viii) Provision within the non-Voted element of the DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit will be decreased by £2,252,000 from £2,652,400,000 to £2,650,148,000. This reflects: £615,000 transfer to Class III Vote 3 for contaminated land work by the Environment Agency (£100,000), transfer of £500,000 from the Local Government DEL for Isles of Scilly water credit approvals, take-up of £215,000 end-year flexibility for air quality SCAs and £2,867,000 from Class III Vote 2 comprising a transfer of £3,500,000 for Ports supplementary credit approvals and transfers to Class III Vote 2 of £6,367,000 for grant funding of the Sunderland Metro Main extension (£5,417,000), World squares (£650,000), Mobility Centres (£300,000). Also a take-up of £800,000 end-year flexibility transferred to DfEE for credit approvals issued to Derby City council.

(ix) The net increase in the DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit will be offset by transfers to; the Department of Trade and Industry Departmental Expenditure Limit, Department of Social Security Departmental Expenditure Limit, Scotland Departmental Expenditure Limit, Department for International Development Departmental Expenditure Limit; from the DETR Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit, Department of Social Security Departmental Expenditure Limit, Department of Trade and Industry Departmental Expenditure Limit, Home Office Departmental Expenditure Limit, Department of Health Departmental Expenditure Limit and by a charge on the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

(b) The DETR Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit will be increased by £8,430,000 from £35,352,718,000 to £35,361,148,000. This increase is the net effect of a take-up of end-year flexibility of £8,630,000, and a transfer of £500,000 to the DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit, partially offset by transfers from DCMS of £300,000. The changes are set out in greater detail as follows:

(i) The changes for Class III, Vote 4 are as follows: increased provision for the Local Government Commission (Section B) by £340,000 in respect of mapping costs and for Best Value Intervention by £1,410,000 (offset by a reduction in payments to the Audit commission for work in connection with Best Value Inspection and by drawing on the end-year flexibility entitlement for DETR's Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit in Cm 4812); increased provision for Local Government Research and Publicity (Section C) by £1,280,000, comprising publicity costs in relation to Best Value and grant distribution, offset by savings on Valuation services (Section A), Best Value Inspection (Section B) and an increase of £180,000 in Appropriations in Aid; increased provision for London governance by £4,400,000 (Section D) to reflect revised estimates for the costs of preparing for the Greater London Authority and associated bodies offset by drawing on the end-year flexibility entitlement for DETR's Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit announced in Cm 4812 and by £300,000 transferred from Department of Culture, Media and Sport; provision of £494,000 for emergency financial assistance to local authorities in connection with flooding emergencies (Section H) offset by saving on Section A and by drawing on the end-year flexibility for DETR's Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit announced in Cm 4812; reclassification of certain direct current expenditure in Section B as direct capital expenditure and certain capital expenditure in Section C as current grants and transfers.

(ii) Provision within the non-Voted element of the Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit will be increased by £3,135,000 from £135,952,000 to £138,087,000. This reflects a take-up of end-year flexibility of £3,635,000 and the transfer of £500,000 to DETR's Main Programme DEL.

(iii) The net increase in the DETR Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit will be offset by a charge on the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

(c) The Office of Water Services Departmental Expenditure Limit will increase by £611,000 from –£45,000 to £567,000 and it's running cost limit will be reduced by £1,214,000 from £12,391,000 to £11,177,000.

(i) This change for Class III, Vote 10 will be partly effected by the take-up £485,000 of end-year flexibility comprising £40,000 for capital and £445,000 for running costs etc. The supplementary also includes a claim on the Departmental Expenditure Limit Reserve of £126,000 in respect of part of the pension costs of the former Director General of the Office of Water Services.

The increase in the Office of Water Services Departmental Expenditure Limit will be offset by a charge on the Departmental Expenditure Limit Reserve and will therefore not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

(d) The Office of the Rail Regulator Departmental Expenditure Limit will increase by £78,000 from £1,000 to £79,000 and its running cost limit will be increased by £78,000 from £13,690,000 to £13,768,000.

(i) This change for Class III, Vote 9 will be effected by the take-up of £78,000 running costs end-year flexibility to meet increased requirements associated with the Competition Act and Ladbroke Grove inquiry.

The increase in the Office of the Rail Regulator will be offset by a charge on the Departmental Expenditure Limit Reserve and will therefore not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Red Routes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many instances of illegal parking on Red Routes in London have been recorded, and how much was spent on policing them, in each year since their inception. [135911]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that the Metropolitan police have issued the following number of Fixed Penalty Notices for illegal parking on Red Routes in London:

1993—22,130
1994—22,166
1995—23,362
1996—37,303
1997—50,235
1998—98,289
2000—48,197 (January-March).

For the financial years 1999–2000 and 2000–01, the Metropolitan police have budgeted about £19 million for Red Route enforcement. Budget information for the previous years is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Leslie: To ask the President of the Council what proposals she has to amend the Privy Council Office Departmental Expenditure Limit and running costs limit for 2000–01. [137634]

Mrs. Beckett: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate for Class XVII, Vote 5, the Privy Council Office Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) for 2000–01 will be increased by £373,000 from £2,578,000 to £2,951,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £373,000 from £2,618,000 to £2,991,000.

The increase in the DEL is to fund the new Business Co-ordination Unit (BCU) (£320,000) which I announced on 11 May 2000, Official Report, column 433W, and to take up money granted from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund (£53,000).

The increase will be a charge on a DEL reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

CABINET OFFICE

Electronic Communications Act

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what use has been made of the powers in section 8 of the Electronic Communications Act 2000. [138177]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Electronic Communications Act 2000 contains in section 8 a power to amend legislation by statutory instrument, to authorise or facilitate electronic communication or storage. The first order laid before Parliament under this section is the Companies Act 1985 (Electronic Communications) Order 2000 amending company law, of which a draft was laid before the House on 23 October under the affirmative resolution procedure.

The second order to be laid before Parliament is planned to be an order by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and the Regions, to allow electronic communication between the Department of the Environment; Transport and the Regions (DETR) and local authorities of Housing Revenue Account subsidy determinations and decisions.

In her memorandum submitted to Parliament during the passage of the Electronic Communications Bill in January 2000, my hon. Friend the Minister for Small Business and E-Commerce said:

> the Government envisage that the first Order would be subject to an affirmative resolution, but that Orders under clause 8 would normally be subject to a negative resolution. After the first Order therefore the affirmative resolution procedure would be used only exceptionally, with any Orders that raised major issues of principle.

As no major issues of principle are raised by the DETR order, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and the Regions proposes to make it subject to the negative resolution procedure. This will enable it to come into force in time for the annual determination of Housing Revenue Account Subsidy. In this case it is likely to be made, and could come into force, before the company law order.

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans she has to change the 2000–01 Departmental Expenditure Limit or running cost limit for the Cabinet Office. [137363]

Marjorie Mowlam: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates:

The Departmental Expenditure Limit for Cabinet Office (Class XVII, Vote 1 and Vote 3) will be increased by £51,988,000 from £194,960,000 to £246,948,000 and the gross running costs limit will be increased by £18,192,000 from £95,562,000 to £113,754,000. Also the net running costs limit will be decreased by £3,000,000 from £2,827,000 to -£173,000.

This is mainly to take account of the following changes:

(a) A transfer payment from Inland Revenue (Class XVI, Vote 5) (£15,000,000) towards development of the Government Gateway part of the Corporate IT Strategy for Government; and a payment to the Department of Social Security: administration (Class XII, Vote 3) (£5,000) in respect of Inter-Ministerial Group on Older People.

(b) An investment in the Modernising Government agenda and Cabinet Office Action Plan (£2,788,000) to be funded from the Invest to Modernise Fund; an investment is the infrastructure for e-government, including the Knowledge Network, as part of the Corporate IT Strategy to be funded from the Capital Modernisation Fund (£21,000,000).

(c) The Cabinet Office has taken up end-year flexibility (£13,205,000) from its entitlement (£24,388,000) as set out in the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper Cm 4812 published on 18 July 2000. This is to fund ongoing activities within the Cabinet Office including establishing the e-Envoy and funding slippage in programmes from the previous year.

The increase will be offset by transfers or charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Internet Access

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what percentage of the United Kingdom population has internet access at home; what plans she has to extend home internet access; and how she intends to achieve such goals. [135816]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Seven million UK homes, 28 per cent., are now connected to the internet with almost one million new homes going on line in the last quarter.

We will continue to follow telecommunications competition policies that have helped the UK become the cheapest country in Europe for unmetered off-peak internet access, and among the cheapest for metered off-peak access. The rapid growth of digital TV in the UK—21 per cent. of UK households currently subscribe—will also increase home internet access.

In addition, the Department for Education and Employment is piloting ways of providing low-cost recycled computers to unemployed people and those with low incomes.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Learning and Skills Council

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will issue his strategic guidance to the new Learning and Skills Council. [138053]

Mr. Blunkett: I have today sent my remit letter to Bryan Sanderson, the chairman of the Learning and Skills Council, setting out my strategic vision and the key priorities for the first three years of the LSCs operation. Copies of the remit letter have been placed in the Library.

Area Cost Adjustment

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the formula for Area Cost Adjustment for Kent schools for 2001–02 will be based on 1998 figures. [137378]

Ms Estelle Morris: Ministers are currently considering a decision on this issue and will make an announcement in due course.

Teacher Vacancies

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by LEA in descending order the percentage of (a) teaching posts currently vacant and (b) children attending schools in the LEA entitled to free school meals. [137371]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is contained in tables, copies of which have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

The number of regular teachers in maintained schools increased by 6,900 between January 1998 and January 2000.

A DfEE survey of maintained secondary schools in England in the first week of September 2000 indicated that there were about 1,000 secondary teacher vacancies; the equivalent figure at January 2000 was 1,200.

General information on schools has recently been published in a statistical volume 'Statistics of Education—Schools in England 2000', a copy of which is available from the Library, or alternatively can be accessed on the Department's statistical website www.dfee.gov.uk/statistics.

Civil Servants (Relocation)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 16 May 2000, Official Report, column 100W, on the relocation of civil servants, when the contract with Cendant Relocation (UK) Ltd. was last renewed; where the contract was advertised; and what the length and value of the contract is. [137170]

Mr. Wills: The contract with Cendant Relocation (UK) Ltd. was last renewed on 23 March 2000. The contract was put out to competitive tender on the basis of nine national and locally sourced companies. The contract is for a period of three years. The contract value is dependent upon the number of departmental staff who use the service offered by Cendant.

Teacher Contracts

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance he gives to local education authorities on providing written contracts; and what redress an employed teacher has against a local education authority that fails to provide a contract of employment. [137101]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend has not given any guidance to local education authorities on the provision of written contracts of employment. He has given guidance to school governing bodies about their obligation to provide a written statement each year to teachers of how their pay has been determined.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what statutory provisions govern the provision of written contracts by local education authorities on the (a) part-time and (b) full-time employment of teachers. [137100]

Ms Estelle Morris: Local education authorities are under the same requirements as other employers to provide written particulars of employment to employees. In addition, authorities, or the governing bodies of schools with delegated budgets, are required under the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document to provide written statements each year to teachers of how their pay has been determined.

Pupil Referral Units

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has had with disaffected young people about the framework and curriculum of pupil referral units. [137084]

Jacqui Smith: Officials from my Department regularly meet disaffected young people, including as part of the recent review of the Social Inclusion: Pupil Support Standards Fund grant. We are also reviewing standards at pupil referral units (PRUs) and are arranging to meet pupils who have been excluded from school to find out from them what worked in PRUs. Ofsted inspection of PRUs usually includes discussion with students about the education they receive. The recently established Children's and Young People's Unit is considering how we can increase the involvement of children and young people in the design and delivery of policies and services that affect them.

My officials are also working with a number of voluntary sector partners to develop innovative programmes for disaffected pupils.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what guidelines he has issued on pupil/teacher ratios in pupil referral units; [137083]

(2) what guidance he has given pupil referral units about reintegrating pupils into mainstream education; [137080]

(3) what special training is given to staff working in pupil referral units. [137078]

Jacqui Smith: As part of comprehensive guidance covering pupil attendance, behaviour and exclusion my right hon. Friend issued detailed guidance in July 1999 on staffing and training in Pupil Referral Units (PRUs) and re-integration into mainstream education of pupils attending PRUs.

Staff in PRUs must be qualified teachers. Teachers in their induction year may require additional training in meeting the needs of difficult and disruptive children. A PRU's management committee should help identify staff development needs and the local education authority should provide opportunities for career development and in-service training. Training should include national curriculum courses, behaviour management and, where relevant, guidance from subject advisers on the curriculum.

Following exclusion, an individual re-integration plan should be drawn up for the pupil. Where possible, excluded pupils should be re-integrated as quickly as possible. It is expected that primary pupils will be re-integrated within one term. By 2002 all excluded pupils must be offered full-time education.

Staffing levels in PRUs should allow time to plan for individual pupils; helping pupils' re-entry into education or employment; building relationships with pupils and parents and administrative tasks. It is considered good practice for a PRU always to have at least two members of staff on site. In 2000 the pupil:teacher ratio in PRUs was 4.3 compared to 4.5 in 1999.

The money available from the Social Inclusion: Pupil Support Standards Fund Grant to help schools and local education authorities tackle poor behaviour and provide education outside school for those who have been excluded will increase tenfold from £17 million in 1996–97 to £174 million in 2001–02.

Copies of the guidance mentioned above, DfEE Circulars 10–99 (Chapter 7) and 11–99 (Chapters 4 and 5), are available in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many young people (a) are receiving and (b) have received an education in a pupil referral unit in each of the last three years; [137081]

(2) how many pupil referral units there are in (a) England, (b) Nottingham and (c) Nottinghamshire. [137082]

Jacqui Smith: Provisional figures for 2000 show that there were 8,479 pupils registered at pupil referral units (PRUs). This compares with 7,530 in 1997, 7,740 in 1998 and 8,263 in 1999. This means an increase of nearly 1,000 places since 1997. In addition, the number of pupils dually registered at both school and PRU increased from 4,166 in 1998 to 4,586 in 2000.

Latest figures show that there are nearly 300 PRUs in England. Nottingham City LEA has two PRUs. Nottinghamshire LEA has four PRUs. A number of LEAs are amalgamating pupil referral units to bring them under one management structure in order to rationalise and improve provision. As indicated above, there has been an increase in the scale of provision for pupils at PRUs.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what criteria are used to evaluate the effectiveness of pupil referral units. [137079]

Jacqui Smith: OFSTED inspects pupil referral units (PRUs) using the framework of inspection for schools, adapted for PRUs. The inspection includes looking at quality of teaching; pupils' progress; management and value for money. Following an OFSTED inspection, the LEA must prepare a written action plan, in consultation with the management committee of the PRU and the teacher in charge. A recent OFSTED analysis of inspection reports from 38 inspections undertaken in 2000–01 highlights: improved teaching; improved pupil progress and achievement; better management; better value for money and some improved accommodation.

Class Sizes (Leicestershire)

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that Leicestershire LEA meets his target that no infant is taught in a class size of 30 or more by September 2001. [137058]

Ms Estelle Morris: For the huge majority of infants, the Government have secured early delivery of their pledge to limit infant class sizes to 30 pupils. In September 2000, as few as 30,000 five, six and seven-year-olds remained in infant classes of 31 or more. The figure in January 1998 was 485,000. The pledge is supported by over £600 million, and allocations so far to Leicestershire LEA amount to nearly £4 million—enough to support 71 additional teachers this year, and 24 additional classrooms. This has enabled the authority to make steady progress towards meeting the pledge: in September 2000, over 94 per cent. of five, six and seven-year-olds in Leicestershire were in infant classes of 30 or below, compared with 89 per cent. in September 1999. The figure in January 1998 was 78 per cent.

School Playing Fields

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will provide a breakdown by region of the number of state schools which sought approval from his Department for the sale of playing fields between 1990–2000. [136752]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 6 November 2000]: The information is not available in the form requested.

Prior to October 1998 only grant-maintained schools were required to seek consent from the Secretary of State before selling any land. Since the introduction in October 1998 of section 77 of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998, local authorities and governing bodies of all maintained schools, including foundation schools, have been required to obtain the Secretary of State's consent before disposing of playing fields or any part of a playing field. The Secretary of State will grant such approval only if the application meets the tough criteria against which all applications are considered.

Before the change in the law, local authorities could and did sell playing fields as and when they chose to do so. An estimated 40 playing fields a month were sold in this way under the previous Government.

Since October 1998 there have been 180 applications from local authorities and governing bodies to sell a playing field or part of a playing field. The following table provides a breakdown of these applications by local education authority.

Teacher Training

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make it his policy to include English and maths key skills qualifications within the curriculum 2000 programme at an equivalent level to GCSE English and maths for the purpose of initial teacher training. [135929]

Ms Estelle Morris: It is for initial teacher training (ITT) providers to decide which qualifications meet the Secretary of State's entry requirements and can be accepted, including those relating to the key skills of communication and application of number. Qualifications must, however, be of the equivalent standard to a GCSE grade C, or above.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many trainee teachers were recruited to initial teacher training courses from 1995–96 to 2000–01, broken down between (a) primary and secondary trainees, (b) undergraduate and postgraduate and (c) secondary by subject; and if he will list the Government's target for teacher recruitment in each category. [134344]

Ms Estelle Morris: Data on recruitment to initial teacher training (ITT) courses starting in 2000–01 for each provider in England are not yet available. I hope they will be shortly. I will write to the hon. Member with the information as soon as possible, and will place a copy of the response in the Library.

Teacher Recruitment

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many new teachers were recruited in the last academic year. [134713]

Ms Estelle Morris: The numbers of full-time and part-time teachers recruited to the maintained sector in England during the two most recent financial years for which data are available are shown in the table:

New entrants	23,000	21,200
Re-entrants	29,300	27,500
Total entrants	52,300	48,700

All numbers have been rounded to the nearest 100.

The number of retirements from teaching was unusually high in 1997–98 because of changes to the Teachers Pensions Scheme introduced by the previous Administration in 1997, which meant that more teachers than usual had to be recruited for September 1997.

The number of regular teachers in the maintained sector has increased by 6,900 since January 1998 and by 3,400 since January 1999.

The gap between the spending plans of the previous Administration and the increase in unavoidable pay, price and other pressures facing schools in 1998–99 was equivalent to employing 25,000 fewer teachers. But as a result of the extra £835 million increase in both education SSA and revenue support grant, teacher numbers (including supply teachers) increased by over 4,000.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many physics graduates were recruited into teacher training in 2000–01. [134348]

Ms Estelle Morris: Data on recruitment to initial teacher training (ITT) courses starting in 2000–01 for each provider in England are not yet available. I hope they will be shortly. I will write to the hon. Member with the information as soon as possible, and will place a copy of the response in the Library.

WALES

Electricity Supply

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of Welsh electricity supply was provided by nuclear power stations for each of the last 10 years. [137217]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

The electricity supply in Wales is mainly provided through the national grid and it is not possible to distinguish separately the source of the electricity.

Electricity produced by the one nuclear station in Wales (Wylfa) (the second station, Trawsfynydd, closed in 1993) may be consumed in England while nuclear electricity generated in England, Scotland or France can be consumed in Wales. In 1999 Wylfa's output to the national grid was 7.2 TWh while electricity consumption in Wales is estimated to have been 16 and 17 TWh.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals there are to amend his Department's Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01. [138051]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Wales Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £114,572,000 from £7,693,663,000 to £7,808,235,000. The increase is a result of:

(i) the take up of end-year flexibility entitlement of £94,895,000;

(ii) net transfers to other government Departments of £252,000;

(iii) additional support of £15,309,000 for Hill Farmers and agriculture resulting from the Agriculture Minister's statement of 30 March 2000; and,

(iv) a final allocation from the Capital Modernisation Fund of £4,620,000.

The increase includes the following transfers:

(i) £1,100,000 to Class III, Vote 1 for cattle herd registration;

(ii) £1,068,000 from Class I, Vote 1 for mature student bursaries;

(iii) £150,000 from Class IV, Vote 1 for locks for pensioners;

(iv) £536,000 to Class IX, Vote 1 for Sector Challenge; and,

(v) £166,000 from Class IV, Vote 1 for Crime Prevention.

The balance will be met by a charge on the Departmental Expenditure Limit Reserve for the take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement and the additional agriculture provision. The Capital Modernisation Fund monies will be met from the central CMF budget. None of these changes will therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

China

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the timetable and process of review of the UK/China human rights dialogue. [135766]

Mr. Battle: We conduct formal sessions of the UK/China human rights dialogue twice a year. The next session is scheduled to take place in February 2001.

We keep the dialogue process under continuous and critical review. Our object is to develop the most effective way of helping to improve human rights in China. As far as the dialogue itself is concerned, we look for ways to make it more effective, and to identify areas where we can work with the Chinese to improve the observance of human rights in specific areas.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government will reach a decision on sponsoring a resolution on human rights in China and Tibet at the 57 United Nations Commission for Human Rights. [135769]

Mr. Battle: The Government will review their position towards a resolution on China at the 57th session of the UN Commission on Human Rights (March 2001) following the next rounds of the UK/China and EU/China human rights dialogues, both scheduled to take place in February 2001.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the UK Government made to the troika concerning the human rights content of the EU/China summit. [135768]

Mr. Battle: The position taken by the troika on the question of human rights in China at the EU/China Summit on 23 October was based on discussions among partners in September ahead of the EU/China Human Rights Dialogue on 29 September. The Government play an active role in setting the direction for EU policy towards the human rights situation in China, including the identification of key concerns and strategy for meetings with the Chinese authorities.

Qualified Majority Voting

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy relating to (1) (a) the balance of responsibilities between the EU and UK Government and (b) the proposals to the change to qualified majority voting in relation to the choice of Common Foreign and Security Policy representatives (Article 23(2)); [136054]

(2) (a) the balance of responsibilities between the EU and United Kingdom Government in relation to mixed agreements and (b) the proposals to change to qualified majority voting on mixed agreements (New Article 300 (8)); [136043]

(3) (a) the balance of responsibilities between the EU and UK Government and (b) the proposals to the change to qualified majority voting in relation to the Common Foreign and Security Policy international agreements (Article 24); [136053]

(4) (a) the balance of responsibilities between the EU and HM Government and (b) the proposals to the change to qualified majority voting in relation to association agreements (Article 300 (2)); [136047]

(5) (a) the balance of responsibilities between the EU and UK Government and (b) the proposals to change to qualified majority voting in relation to the co-operation measures under Title IV (Article 66). [136052]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 30 October 2000, Official Report, columns 234–38W.

Press Rebuttal Unit

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) of 6 March 2000, Official Report, column 499W, if he will estimate the cost to date of providing (a) rebuttals of press articles on Europe and (b) his Department's

Euro-myths web page; who selects the items which require a rebuttal; and from where he obtains the information to be used in the rebuttals. [136102]

Mr. Vaz: I correct press articles which contain factual inaccuracies about Government policy towards Europe or our membership of the EU drawing on information held by the FCO and other Government Departments. These correctives are sent to the publication concerned and are now also published on the FCO website. There are no dedicated FCO staff assigned to this task. The only dedicated costs are of faxing or e-mailing the corrective letters, ie the cost of a local telephone call.

Euro

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer about the constitutional issues relating to the euro; and on what dates. [136387]

Mr. Vaz: The Secretary of State meets his Cabinet colleagues on a regular basis and discusses a wide range of issues.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account the Government will take of the results of the Danish referendum in the timing of a possible UK referendum on replacing the pound with the euro. [136256]

Mr. Vaz: As the Prime Minister has said, this decision is a matter for the Danish people and does not change the UK Government's position. We are in favour, in principle, of joining a successful single currency, but in practice the five economic tests must be met. Should Government and Parliament recommend joining, the final decision should be for the British people in a referendum.

European Superpower

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date it became the Government's policy to support the creation of a European superpower. [136514]

Mr. Vaz: This Government have long supported a Europe which can be a superpower in its economic and political strength. The Government are firmly opposed to the establishment of a federal superstate, as the Prime Minister made clear in Warsaw in October.

UN Human Rights Inquiry Commission

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to request that the Human Rights Inquiry Commission established by the UN Human Rights Commission (a) includes forensic and ballistic experts and (b) is given the means to conduct their investigations. [136454]

Mr. Hain: The Human Rights Inquiry Commission has yet to be endorsed by a special session of the Economic and Social Council to be convened in New York.

(a) It is for the UNCHR Inquiry Commission to decide who the members should be and what skills will be required.

(b) It is our understanding that a voluntary contribution has already been offered by a third party to ensure the investigations could be conducted successfully.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures Her Majesty's Government will take to support the investigation of the Human Rights Inquiry Commission established by the UN Human Rights Commission to collect information about violations of human rights and international law committed by the Israeli occupying power in the occupied Palestinian territories since 28 September. [136452]

Mr. Hain: The Human Rights Inquiry Commission has yet to be endorsed by a special session of the Economic and Social Council to be convened in New York.

However, we strongly encourage both Israelis and Palestinians to take action on any human rights abuses that might have been committed during the recent troubles. We would expect both sides to co-operate fully with an internationally approved human rights inquiry.

British Council

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future role of the British Council in Zambia. [136642]

Mr. Hain: The British Council has recently completed a strategic review of its operations around the world. It will continue to operate in Zambia with a focus on governance and education. The Council will retain its public information centre which, through modern internet facilities, will offer ready access to the widest possible range of information. Additional support services will be provided from a regional hub in Zimbabwe. Having recently visited Lusaka, I can vouch for the excellent work the Council is doing in Zambia.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future role of the British Council in Malawi. [136641]

Mr. Hain: The British Council has recently completed a strategic review of its operations around the world. It will continue to operate in Malawi with a focus on governance and education. The Council will retain its public information centre which, through modern internet facilities, will offer ready access to the widest possible range of information. Additional support services will be provided from a regional hub in Zimbabwe. Having recently visited Lilongwe, I can vouch for the excellent work the Council is doing in Malawi.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria are applied when appointing the Chairman of the British Council, with particular reference to the political views of candidates. [136238]

Mr. Hain: No criteria are applied relating to the political views of candidates when appointing the Chairman of the British Council. The criteria used include: an impressive record of achievement in the candidate's chosen field; a high level of strategic and representational skills with the vision and flair to inspire and enthuse; an international perspective and sympathy with the Council's aims; and a personal presence commensurate with the international profile of the appointment.

Whaling

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have for placing sanctions on Japanese vessels in connection with scientific whaling. [136803]

Mr. Hain: We have expressed our total opposition to the Japanese Government on numerous occasions. The UK would need to discuss any proposal for trade sanctions against Japanese vessels in connection with Japan's research whaling programme with our EU partners, since external trade matters fall within the competence of the EU. In addition, there are currently no Japanese fishing vessels operating within UK domestic waters.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Government of Japan concerning their decision to expand the scientific whaling programme to the Southern Ocean Sanctuary; and if he will make a statement. [136938]

Mr. Hain: In our numerous discussions, the Japanese Government have been left in no doubt as to our total opposition to their expanded whaling programme in the North Pacific and their continued research whaling in the Southern Ocean Sanctuary. Both the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State have raised this issue with their Japanese counterparts. As Minister responsible for whaling issues, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food spoke very powerfully against the Japanese decision at the last IWC meeting in Adelaide in June.

International Criminal Court Treaty

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government have taken with other European Union member states to resist efforts by the United States to create an exception for US nationals in the International Criminal Court Treaty. [137324]

Mr. Hain: We have made clear to the US, both bilaterally and with our EU partners, our concerns about their proposal. We continue to hope the United States will come on board in support of the International Criminal Court. A court with the United States as a member would be very much stronger. However, any solution to their concerns must, if it is to receive support, respect the integrity of the Rome Statute and maintain the effectiveness of the court.

Pakistan

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the military Government of Pakistan on its programme for returning to democracy. [137386]

Mr. Hain: We continue to press Pakistan's military regime for the early and credible timetable for the restoration of democracy. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and his colleagues of the Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group strongly underlined this to Pakistan's Foreign Minister during their meeting in New York on 15 September.

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to amend his Department's Departmental Expenditure Limit and running costs limit for 2000–01. [138156]

Mr. Hain: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class VII Vote I, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £96,723,000 from £1,113,610,000 to £1,210,333,000 and running cost limit will be increased by £17,989,000 from £513,993,000 to £531,982,000. The increase is the net effect of:

(i) additional provision of £73,935,000 on Section B for UK contributions to United Nations Missions in the former Yugoslavia (includes UN Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo) and the former Soviet Union, United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (Iraq), United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observer Mission, United Nations Mission for the Referendum on Western Sahara, United Nations Transitional Authority in East Timor, United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, the United Nations International Criminal Tribunals for Yugoslavia and Rwanda, the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe, the European Community Monitoring Mission and Western European Union Police Mission in Albania;

(ii) take up of end year flexibility of £16,264,000 for running costs and £4,799,000 for capital expenditure;

(iii) a successful bid of £1,725,000 against the Capital Modernisation Fund approved by the Chief Secretary.

Belize

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken in response to recent territorial claims on Belize by Guatemala; and if he will make a statement. [137325]

Mr. Battle: The UK has encouraged both parties to remain in constructive talks under the auspices of the Organisation of American States, in order to find a peaceful resolution to the border dispute.

The UK continues to support Belize's sovereignty and territorial integrity. We will provide legal assistance in Belize's efforts to demarcate its land and maritime. We continue to make our views clear to both sides.

Export Controls

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he received between November 1999 and November 2000 on (a) the timing and (b) the content of strategic export controls legislation from (i) non-Governmental organisations including voluntary and charitable groups, (ii) commercial interests, companies and trade organisations and (iii) other categories; and if he will make a statement. [136604]

Mr. Hain: I refer the right hon. and learned Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry today. (UIN 136001)

EU Enlargement

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries for which it is Government policy that they should ultimately be permitted to join the European Union. [136230]

Mr. Vaz: There are currently 13 candidates for membership of the European Union (Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Bulgaria, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Malta, Poland, Romania, Slovakia, Slovenia and Turkey).

In addition, as Articles 49 and 6(1) of the Treaty on European Union make clear, membership of the European Union is open to any European state which respects > the principals of liberty, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law.

This includes the countries of the Western Balkans who are all potential candidates for EU membership.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Civil Servants (Relocation)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which relocation companies hold contracts with her Department for the relocation of civil servants; when the contracts were last renewed; where the contracts were advertised; and what the length and value of each contract is. [137196]

Clare Short: Crown Worldwide Ltd. provide relocation services to my Department for staff taking up or returning from assignments overseas. A three year contract, with the option of a two year extension, was signed in April 1998. It was advertised in October 1997 in the International Freight Weekly, EU Journal, Government Opportunities and the Daily Telegraph. The option for the two year extension was taken up in May 2000 and the contract will expire on 31 March 2003. The contract has no financial value, we pay for services provided. There is no contractual arrangement for relocation within the UK and staff are required to seek competitive tenders from three companies.

Misuse of Aid

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of corruption in projects administered by the United Nations. [136627]

Clare Short: The Board of Auditors, whose membership currently includes the UK Comptroller and Auditor General, acts as external auditor of the accounts of the UN, its funds and programmes.

Expenditure

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what changes will be made to the Departmental Expenditure Limit and running costs limit for her Department in 2000–01. [138012]

Clare Short: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, for Class VIII, Vote 1: Department for International Development, the Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £8,546,000 from £2,113,186,000 to £2,121,732,000 for voted expenditure giving a total of voted and non-voted expenditure of £2,759,768,000. The running cost limit for the Department for International Development will be increased by £3,985,000. The increase is the net effect of:

> an increase of £2,560,988 in respect of the carry forward of underspends from 1999–2000 on the International Development Vote; > a DETR transfer of £2,000,000 in respect of the environmental know how fund;
> an allocation of £485,000 under the civil service modernisation fund allocation to the running costs budget;
> the drawing down of £3,500,000 from our running costs entitlement to end-year.

The increase will be met by transfers or from the DEL reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Great Lakes

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about the development of a regional policy for the Great Lakes region of Africa. [136458]

Clare Short: We are strongly involved in supporting Rwanda's recovery and development and in supporting Uganda's development. We are also very supportive of the Lusaka peace process. We hope to support other countries' lead in Burundi. We have decided to undertake some analysis in the Department to deepen our understanding of the regional context. It would be an exaggeration to call this a regional policy.

Horn of Africa (Drought)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the drought in the Horn of Africa region. [136623]

Clare Short: The UN Special Envoy of the Secretary General for the drought in the Horn of Africa, Ms Catherine Bertini, visited Kenya and Ethiopia between 17–23 September. She found that there has been progress in addressing the effects of drought in the Horn of Africa region since April; food and non-food assistance provided through the United Nations, non-governmental organisations and Government has prevented a famine and set the foundation for recovery. Almost 1 million tonnes of food was delivered to drought affected people in the Horn of Africa countries between January and August 2000. She reported that the crisis is not over and millions of people are still at risk, and recommended that relief needs in the region should be reassessed this month with a new Interagency Relief Drought Appeal for the Horn of Africa being issued in December. We continue to respond to needs as they arise.

Cambodia

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what funding her Department has given in each of the last three years to Cambodia, indicating the projects for which aid was given; what recent request she has received for aid for flood relief; and if she will make a statement. [137323]

Mr. Foulkes: The table provides the detail on our funding and projects in Cambodia:

We have allocated £1.25 million to alleviate the suffering of flood victims in Cambodia. This includes £250,000 through the International Federation of the Red Cross (IFRC), £500,000 through UNICEF and £500,000 for international non-governmental organisations. In addition, Cambodia will benefit from a part of the £600,000 allocated to the IFRC flood appeal for the Mekong region. We have contributed a further £125,000 as our share of the EU humanitarian aid package.

A detailed statement on our support for development in Cambodia is contained in the Country Strategy Paper published in March this year. A copy is in the House of Commons Library.

Fishing (West Africa)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the impact of fishing by western countries off the coast of West Africa on development in that region. [136622]

Clare Short: The Government have provided substantial support to countries of the West African region for the implementation of the international Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries. This is a five-year programme which is being delivered through a partnership with the FAO and countries of the region. It will strengthen West African countries' capacities to manage their coastal fisheries. It is focused on the needs of small-scale, artisanal fishers and programme resources will be available to support those communities' impacted by the activities of foreign vessels.

We are also undertaking a series of studies of the impact of foreign fishing on West Africa.

HEALTH

Synthetic Human Antibody Research

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how long he estimates it will take successfully to complete his Department's synthetic human antibody research; what is the estimated cost of completing the remaining research in the project; and if he will make a statement. [135691]

Mr. Denham: The Department is not undertaking synthetic antibody research.

Rothbury Community Hospital, Northumberland

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the date by which work will have commenced on the new Rothbury Community Hospital, Northumberland. [136552]

Mr. Hutton: The new community hospital at Rothbury is part of Phase II of the redevelopment of Wansbeck General Hospital. The Full Business Case for the scheme is in the final stages of approval and a decision is expected very soon. Until then, however, a definitive start date cannot be given.

Tinnitus

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the therapies and pharmacological solutions available on the NHS to counter the effects of tinnitus; and if he will commission research on this subject. [136202]

Yvette Cooper: There are a number of therapies available to treat tinnitus. While maskers are available, which emit sounds that counteract the tinnitus noises, treatment currently focuses on an cognitive approach to the problem such as relaxation techniques to reduce stress levels, and listening to surf sound tapes to cover the tinnitus noises. Many patients manage their condition without medical intervention.

There is currently no pharmacological solution available to treat tinnitus.

The main agency through which we support medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC). MRC always welcomes high-quality applications for support into any aspect of human health and these are judged in open competition with other demands on funding. Awards are made according to their scientific quality and importance to human health.

The Department currently has no plans to commission any research on tinnitus in relation to its Policy Research Programme and National Health Service research and development programmes.

NHS Patients

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instruct the Chief Executive of the NHS to provide patients with the option of a disclaimer allowing them to refuse treatment in private units. [137110]

Mr. Denham: The option of a disclaimer allowing patients to refuse treatment in private units is unnecessary.

The concept of consent is implicit in the relationship between the general practitioner and the patient. The current Patient's Charter sets out the right > to be referred to a consultant acceptable to the patient, when the GP thinks it is necessary.

This means that the GP will advise of the consultant(s) he/she considers will give the best medical treatment, on the basis of clinical need and the expertise available, and the patient can choose which of those offered are acceptable.

If a patient is offered National Health Service treatment, which the GP in his/her professional opinion considers necessary, in a setting which the patient finds unacceptable and the patient decides not to take up that treatment, that is their choice.

Private Hospitals (Standards)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures the Government are taking to ensure high standards of (a) medical care, (b) personal care and (c) hygiene and cleanliness in private hospitals. [136842]

Ms Stuart: Independent healthcare is currently regulated under the Registered Homes Act 1984. We recognise the deficiencies with the present system and that it has not kept pace with the developments in independent healthcare over the past two decades. We are therefore putting in place a new modern regulatory framework for the independent healthcare sector, through the Care Standards Act 2000. One of the main elements of the Act is to establish a new independent body, the National Care Standards Commission, which will regulate independent hospitals to proper modern standards. The Act will put in place a regulatory system that will ensure the delivery of quality services, proper accountability by the provider, and flexibility to allow the regulatory framework to respond to developments in the healthcare field.

To ensure consistency and quality of service provision, the Commission will inspect against national minimum standards currently being developed for private acute hospitals having regard to those standards which already apply to National Health Service hospitals. This will ensure that patients can have confidence in the quality and safety of medical and personal care, hygiene and cleanliness. The development of the national minimum standards is being undertaken in consultation with patients, providers, inspectors, healthcare professionals and specialists. Once the standards are developed they will be the subject of a full public consultation in April 2001.

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to amend his Department's and the Food Standards Agency's departmental expenditure and running costs limit for 2000–01. [138157]

Mr. Milburn: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates for Class II, Votes 1 and 4 the overall Departmental Expenditure Limit for Class II which includes the Department of Health and the Foods Standard Agency, will be increased by £61,213,000 from £45,029,542,000 to £45,090,755,000.

Of this increase the Department of Health Departmental Expenditure limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £49,616,000 from £44,948,272,000 to £44,997,888,000. The increase is the net effect of changes to Class II, Vote 1 (Hospital, community health, family health and related services, England) of £48,357,000 made up £50,000,000 from HM Treasury's Capital Modernisation Fund for Modernising Coronary Heart Disease services. In addition the following transfers will take place; £1,357,000 from the Scottish Executive, (£47,000) for the High Security Infectious Diseases Unit and (£1,310,000) for Out of Area Treatments. The overall increase is partially offset by a transfer of £3,000,000 to Class I, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment) for the Queen Mary Westfield Tomlinson merger.

An increase of £1,256,000 for Class II, Vote 2 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health and personal social services, England) is the net effect of transfers (detailed below) and £6,500,000 take-up of end year flexibility (as set out in Table 7 of the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper "Cm 4812" published on 18 July 2000) and £1,795,000 (running costs) from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund, transfers of £75,000 (running costs) from Class IX, Vote 2 (Department of Trade and Industry: science) for the human genetics commission and £36,000 from Class IV, Vote 1 (Home Office administration, police, immigration and other services, England and Wales) for central treatment fund pilot projects. The overall increase is partially offset by transfers of £4,000,000 to Class I, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) for the standards fund, £3,000,000 to Class IV, Vote 1 (Home Office administration, police, immigration and other services, England and Wales) for unaccompanied asylum seeking children and £150,000 to Class III, Vote 2 (Environment, Transport and regions: Planning, roads, local transport and vehicle safety) for mobility centres.

Within the Departmental DEL there is also a transfer of £11,837,000 from Class II, Vote 2 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health and personal social services, England) to Class II, Vote 1 (Hospital, community health, family health and related services, England).

The Department of Health's gross running cost limit will be increased by £1,870,000 from £300,620,000 to £302,490,000 as detailed above.

The take-up of non-voted supplementary credit approvals for personal social services (DoH/LACAP) in England has increased by £3,000 from £18,700,000 to £18,703,000 in respect of take up of end-year flexibility entitlement as mentioned above.

The Food Standards Agency Departmental Expenditure limit will also be increased by £11,597,000 from £81,270,000 to £92,867,000. The increase is the net effect of the take-up of end-year flexibility of £8,366,000 (of which £1,000,000 is running costs) from the Department of Health, an allocation of £375,000 (of which £280,000 is running costs) from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund and transfers of £2,856,000 from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food comprising £1,600,000 (of which £350,000 is running costs) to cover set up costs of the Agency which fell in 2000–01 rather than 1999–2000 as originally planned, and £1,256,000 (of which £1,125,000 is running costs) for the additional responsibilities taken on by the Agency

The Food Standards Agency's gross running costs limit will increase by £2,755,000 from £104,835,000 to £107,590,000 as detailed above.

All increases will either be offset by transfers to or from other Departmental Expenditure Limits (detailed above) or charges to the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Social Services (Overspending)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports he has received this year from the Association of Directors of Social Services regarding overspending by local authorities on personal social services; and what the conclusions were of these reports. [137122]

Mr. Hutton: I have not formally received a report from the Association of Directors of Social Services on this matter. However, the Department is in close touch with officers of the Association on a wide range of topics. The conclusions of any work by the Association on levels of spending on personal social services are a matter for the Association.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the role of community hospitals in the NHS 10 year national plan. [137404]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service Plan announced a major programme of investment in intermediate care and related services to promote independence and improved quality of care for older people.

As part of this investment, there will be 5,000 extra intermediate care beds by 2004, and the Plan makes it clear that some of these will be in community hospitals.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what consideration he gave to the PFI bid to build a new community hospital in Lymington as a separate project from other community hospitals; [137403]

(2) for what reasons he rejected the PFI bid to build a new community hospital in Lymington; [137405]

(3) if he will make a statement about the future of the proposed new community hospital at Lymington. [137402]

Mr. Denham: Each private finance initiative (PFI) scheme is considered on its own merits and will only be approved if it is clearly demonstrated that the PFI option delivers better value for money to the National Health Service and the taxpayer when compared to the publicly funded alternative.

Despite intensive efforts by the NHS, the Lymington Community Hospital PFI proposal did not produce a viable value for money solution. It was therefore decided to terminate negotiations with the PFI preferred bidder.

The local NHS will now conduct a review with all key stakeholders to assess possible options to deliver the required facilities in Lymington. The outcome will be announced as soon as possible.

In-patient Treatment

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were waiting for in-patient treatment for (a) cancer, (b) heart disease and (c) HIV and hepatitis in each of the last 10 years in the (i) Sutton and Cheam constituency and (ii) Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth Health Authority. [134984]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 6 November 2000]: We do not hold all of the information in the format required. Data are collated by health authority as opposed to parliamentary constituency.

Waiting lists for in-patient treatment for heart disease are held under cardiothoracic surgery and cardiology waiting lists. The figures for Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth are as follows. Data were collected only from 1996–97 onwards.

Total number of inpatients waiting for ordinary/daycase admission as at 31 March

Year	Cardiology	Cardiothoracic surgery
1996–97	260	84
1997–98	347	194
1998–99	313	156
1999–2000	350	149

Information on in-patient waiting times is collected by consultant speciality. Treatment for cancer, HIV and hepatitis is carried out in a number of specialities and the numbers waiting for treatment are therefore not identifiable separately.

Fresh Fruit and Vegetables

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to improve the access to fresh fruit and vegetables to those living in areas with limited shopping facilities. [136587]

Yvette Cooper: [holding answer 6 November 2000]: The National Health Service Plan published in July set out our plans to increase access to fruit and vegetables and make a healthy diet a real choice for everyone. We will work with producers, retailers and others to increase provision and access to fruit and vegetables, particularly in deprived communities, schools and hospitals.

Five local five-a-day pilot initiatives are already underway in Sandwell, Somerset, Airedale and Craven, County Durham and Hastings. These projects aim to increase access to fruit and vegetables across the whole population, but all have a particular focus on improving access to fruit and vegetables for the worst off. The pilots are being carefully evaluated. Based on the lessons from these pilots, and evidence of effective interventions to increase fruit and vegetable consumption, these local initiatives will be developed across the country.

The National School Fruit Scheme will make a free piece of fruit available to school children aged four to six each school day. Pilots will examine the practicalities of the scheme before national roll-out begins.

Hospital Mortuaries

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which organisation is responsible for setting the necessary minimum standard for hospital mortuaries. [137232]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 7 November 2000]: Clinical Pathology Accreditation (UK) Ltd. (CPA) oversees accreditation of National Health Service pathology laboratories which include standards for mortuary and post mortem facilities. In addition, the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) carries responsibility for mortuaries in the same capacity as for any other hospital facility. The HSE's Health Services Advisory Committee is currently revising its publication "Safe working and the prevention of infection in the mortuary and post-mortem room".

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the NHS hospital mortuaries which fail to meet necessary minimum standards. [137236]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 7 November 2000]: Hospital mortuaries are accredited as part of the National Health Service pathology services and are not separately identified.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to establish that NHS hospital mortuaries meet the necessary minimum standard. [137233]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 7 November 2000]: National Health Service pathology laboratory services have responsibility for the standard of hospital mortuaries, as part of accreditation. The Department supported the development of Clinical Pathology Accreditation (CPA) Ltd., the main accreditation body in the United Kingdom. CPA sets standards for laboratory services, inspects laboratories, including mortuaries, against the standards and reports to hospital chief executives.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 603W, (1) when he expects remedial action to be taken to bring the mortuary at Trafford General Hospital to the necessary minimum standard; [137237]

(2) what funding will be provided to achieve the necessary minimum standards at the mortuary of Trafford General Hospital. [137238]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 7 November 2000]: £8,550 was made available in 1998 to ensure that the mortuary at Trafford General Hospital met the minimum standards. As part of this process, work carried out included:

internal and external decoration;

work on the body stores (including replacement panels and thermometers);

a full steam clean;

a repair to the roof; as well as a revamp of the relatives' viewing area.

Trafford Healthcare National Health Service Trust is now in the process of developing a business case for a new mortuary and has the support of the North West Regional Office of the NHS Executive, in doing so.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 603W, what inquiries he has made into the reasons why expenditure on the mortuary at Trafford General Hospital in 1998 failed to bring the facility to the necessary minimum standard. [137239]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 7 November 2000]: As a result of the funding made available in 1998, the current mortuary facilities at Trafford General Hospital do meet the minimum standards.

Salford and Trafford Health Authority is satisfied that the facilities at Trafford General Hospital do not pose a risk to patients and staff alike. As in the rest of the hospital, infection control procedures are in place and are monitored regularly.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the NHS hospital mortuaries which have been visited by Ministers in his Department since May 1997. [137240]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 7 November 2000]: None of the current Ministers at the Department have so far been able to visit an NHS mortuary as part of their visits to the service. We will though keep this possibility in mind for future visit programmes.

Hospices

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what resources he plans to make available to help fund hospices.; [137251]

(2) if hospices will be eligible for financial help as part of the Government's commitment to cancer services. [137252]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 7 November 2000]: We are committed to providing an additional £50 million for hospices by 2004 as announced in the National Health Service Cancer Plan published on 27 September. This will bring the total NHS spend on hospices to £150 million, which will be equal to the amount provided by the voluntary sector. The £50 million investment will be used to end inequalities in access to specialist palliative care and enable the NHS to make a more realistic contribution to the cost hospices incur in providing agreed levels of service.

In order to ensure that the additional funding is allocated effectively and equitably, we will work with hospices and the NHS to define the core components of palliative care services.

In addition to the £50 million there will be a further New Opportunities Fund initiative for community palliative care services over the period 2001–05. A consultation document was be published on 8 November 2000.

Osteopaths

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the working of the Osteopaths Act 1993 and the composition of the Council. [137118]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 7 November 2000]: Members of Parliament raised a number of concerns about the operation of the Osteopaths Act and the composition of the General Osteopathic Council during an Adjournment debate in Westminster Hall on 25 October 2000. I undertook to investigate these concerns and am now doing so.

Cancer Screening Programmes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many lives are estimated to have been saved in each of the last three years in (a) Coventry, South and (b) nationally by (i) breast screening programmes, (ii) cervical screening programmes and (iii) cancer screening programmes. [136582]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 6 November 2000]: There are currently two national screening programmes, for breast cancer and cervical cancer, and a pilot study which is investigating screening for colorectal cancer.

No statistics are available to show how many lives were saved by breast and cervical screening in Coventry, South in the last three years.

Research published in 1999 estimated that the NHS Cervical Screening Programme saved over 8,000 lives between 1988 and 1997. It is estimated to have prevented up to 3,900 cases of cervical cancer each year.

No information is available on how many lives have been saved in total by all the cancer screening programmes.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on how many occasions he has made official visits to (a) the opera and (b) the ballet since May 1997. [136392]

Mr. Chris Smith: Since May 1997 I have attended 20 operas and six ballet performances in an official capacity. I have also attended numerous opera and ballet performances privately.

Sports Clubs

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received about (1) tax relief and exemptions for community and amateur sports clubs; and if he will make a statement; [135649]

(2) charitable status for community and amateur sports clubs; and if he will make a statement. [135648]

Kate Hoey: Since 21 June 2000, I have received representations from the following sports clubs and organisations regarding both tax exemptions and charitable status for community and amateur sports clubs; Sefton Sports Council, Thanet Local Sports Council, Waltham Forest Sports Council, Chelsfield Park Lawn Tennis Club, Blackpool and Fylde Fullbore Pistol and Rifle Club, Portcastrian Rugby Club, Saltash Rugby Football Club, Lymm Rugby Football Club, York Cricket & Rugby Union Football Club. I have also received a number of letters from members of the public. The CCPR and Sport England have also made representations on the benefits of tax exemptions as well as a number of MPs and sport people.

Lee Valley Stadium

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions (a) he and (b) the Minister for Sport have had with (i) members and (ii) representatives of the International Olympic Committee about the suitability of the proposed Lee Valley Stadium as a venue for track and field athletics and the opening and closing ceremonies of a London Olympic Games; and if he will make a statement. [134844]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 26 October 2000]: Apart from discussions with Craig Reedie, in his capacity as Chair of the British Olympic Association, neither myself nor my right hon. Friend have discussed the proposed Lee Valley Stadium with representatives of the International Olympic Committee.

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to amend his Department's Departmental Expenditure Limit and running costs limit for 2000–01. [138172]

Mr. Chris Smith: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class XI, Vote 1, the DCMS Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) for 2000–01 will be increased by £15,679,000 from £1,014,886,000 to £1,030,565,000 and the running costs limit by £2,284,000 from £32,972,000 to £35,256,000.

This is to provide for the use of £2,240,000 of the proceeds from the sale by the British Library of 25 Southampton Buildings for meeting commitments under the Comprehensive Spending Review to various national museums and galleries; and for the use of £521,000 of the sale proceeds for meeting commitments against research, surveys and other services; to provide £2,500,000 for the development of Culture On-Line; to take up DEL end-year flexibility of £10,405,000 on programme expenditure as set out in Table 7 of the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper (Cm 4812) published on 18 July 2000; a transfer of £950,000 from the Department for Education and Employment (Class I, Vote 14) for awards to dance and drama students; a transfer of £300,000 to the Department for Environment, Transport and the Regions (Class III, Vote 4) for the maintenance of Trafalgar Square and Parliament Square following the transfer to the Greater London Authority from 1 October 2000; a payment of £210,000 from the Department of Trade and Industry (Class IX, Vote 1) for Sector Challenge funding of media projects; to take up DEL end-year flexibility of £1,448,000 on running costs expenditure as set out in Table 7 of the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper (Cm 4812) published on 18 July 2000; a transfer of £676,000 from the Cabinet Office for modernising Government expenses; and to provide for receipts of £1,816,000 from the National Lottery Distribution Fund to meet additional costs of the National Lottery Commission in the appointment of a new Lottery operator and the implementation of the licence.

The increases will be offset by transfers, savings or a charge on the DEL Reserve, and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals there are to amend the Scotland Departmental Expenditure Limit and running costs limit for 2000–01. [138204]

Dr. Reid: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class XIII, Vote 1 Scotland and Transfers to the Scottish Consolidated Fund, the Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) for 2000–01 will be increased by £428,073,000 from £14,877,655,000 to £15,305,728,000. As I previously announced to the Scottish Affairs Select Committee on 29 March 2000, the net running costs limit for the Scotland Office will be increased by £1,047,000 from £5,455,000 to £6,502,000 (net of receipts of £120,000).

The changes in DEL include the take-up of end-year flexibility of £444,418,000, offset by a reduction of £32,583,000 for the recovery of European Structural Funds provision drawn forward from 2000–01 and other adjustments agreed in the context of Spending Review 2000; and transfers from the DEL reserve of £8,500,000 for additional funding for the Forestry Commission for lower than expected timber sales, and £150,000 for the Giving Age.

Also included in the revised DEL are transfers to and from other Government Departments amounting to a net increase of £12,619,000. These include;

(i) £13,454,000 from DfEE (Class I, Vote 1) for the Open University;

(ii) £2,527,000 from DSS (Class XII, Vote 3) for resettlement programmes;

(iii) £1,900,000 to MAFF (Class X, Vote 1) for cattle herd registration costs;

(iv) £120,000 to DSS (Class XII Vote 2) for housing benefit for intercalating students;

(v) £1,310,000 to DH (Class II, Vote 1) for the costs of Scottish residents treated in England.

The increase in DEL will be offset by transfers from other Departmental Expenditure Limits or from the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Burden: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to change the Cabinet Office: Security and Intelligence Services Vote Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01. [138154]

The Prime Minister: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the Departmental Expenditure Limit for Class XVII, Vote 2 will be increased by £18,486,000 from £771,100,000 to £789,586,000 and the gross running cost limit will be increased by £10,455,000 from £412,193,000 to £422,648,000.

The change is to effect the transfer of £687,000 from the Modernisation of Government Fund, the take up of the Treasury contribution of £16,790,000 towards a capital project, the take up of running costs end-year flexibility of £500,000 and the take up of other current expenditure end-year flexibility of £509,000.

There will be an increase in Appropriations in Aid of £2,968,000 and a net increase in other current expenditure of £6,877,000.

The increases in provision will be offset by increased receipts or charged to the Reserve and therefore will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Strategic Export Controls

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he received between November 1999 and November 2000 on (a) the timing and (b) the content of strategic export controls legislation from (i) non-Governmental organisations including voluntary and charitable groups, (ii) commercial interests, companies and trade organisations and (iii) other categories; and if he will make a statement. [136603]

The Prime Minister: I refer the right hon. and learned Member to the answer given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to amend his Department's Departmental Expenditure Limits and the Northern Ireland Office expenditure limits for 2000–01. [138027]

Mr. Ingram: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class XV, Vote 1 the Northern Ireland Office Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £96,362,000 from £1,025,202,000 to £1,121,564,000. The running costs limit will be increased by £37,490,000 from £227,371,000 to £264,861,000.

An increase of £36,465,000 is required for costs associated with the implementation of the Patten Report, an additional £36,300,000 to cover prison officer redundancy costs, an increase of £1,390,000 in respect of costs arising from the Good Friday Agreement and £25,174,000 is required to cover increased costs of compensation payments under the various compensation schemes. Additionally £1,733,000 will be transferred from the Northern Ireland Departments DEL to cover costs incurred during the suspension of the Northern Ireland Assembly. The Northern Ireland Departments DEL decreases from £5,201,636,000 to £5,199,903,000.

At the time of the presentation of the Main Estimates the Northern Ireland Office DEL was overstated by £4,700,000 and this has been included in the revised DEL stated.

These increases will be offset by a transfer from the Northern Ireland Departments DEL and a charge on the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Solicitor-General what plans he has to amend the Law Officers' Department's Departmental Expenditure Limit and running costs limit for 2000–01. [138194]

The Solicitor-General: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates for Class V, Vote 4 (The Crown Prosecution Service) and Class V, Vote 6 (HM Procurator General and Treasury Solicitor) the Law Officers' Departments' departmental expenditure limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £18,486,000 from £351,061,000 to £369,547,000.

The Crown Prosecution Service's running costs limit will be increased by £15,540,000 from £229,625,000 to £245,165,000. This increase is required to fund diversity and equality issues, a performance improvement programme, training for the Human Rights Act 1998 and pilots on direct communication of prosecution decisions with victims. An increase in capital expenditure of £2,650,000 will be used to fund joint CPS/police criminal justice and trial units, modernisation of the CPS information technology infrastructure and better integration with police IT systems.

HM Procurator General and Treasury Solicitor's running costs limit will increase by £260,000 from £6,172,000 to £6,432,000. The increase in running costs is to facilitate action being taken by Treasury Solicitor's Department as part of their Modernising Government Action Plan. The increase in capital expenditure of £36,000 will be used to fund continued expansion of the Department's IT systems.

The increases will be partly offset by a transfer of £4,650,000 from the Home Office, an allocation of £1,500,000 from the Capital Modernisation Fund, an allocation of £1,000,000 from the Invest to Modernise Fund and the surrender of £36,000 of the Law Officers' Departments' end year flexibility of £4,565,000 as set out in Table 7 of the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper Cm. 4812 published 18 July 2000. The remainder of the expenditure will be charged to the Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Road Noise (A5)

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the noise nuisance level to local residents of the surface of the A5 at Wibtoft on the Warwickshire/Leicestershire border. [136945]

Mr. Hill: I have been asked to reply.

The noise level on the A5 at Wibtoft has been calculated at 75.77db(A). This is below the defined noise level of 80db(A) which forms part of the sift criteria for dealing with traffic noise on existing trunk roads. May I refer the hon. Member to the written answer on noise mitigation given on 22 March 1999, Official Report, columns 50–51W.

GM Food

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps have been taken to ensure that prohibited GM foods do not enter the UK market. [137349]

Ms Stuart: I have been asked to reply.

The Food Standards Agency (FSA) has written to food manufactures, retailers and local authorities pointing out that it is an offence under the Novel Foods and Novel Food Ingredients Regulations 1997 to sell foods containing non-approved genetically modified ingredients. Prosecution is a matter for local authorities.

Flax and Hemp

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if subsidy for growing flax and hemp is paid to farmers on the basis of the area harvested or the area planted. [135502]

Ms Quin [holding answer 1 November 2000]: The amount of flax and hemp subsidy paid is based on the smallest total area declared by the grower on the following documents:

the IACS declaration (area planted)

the Cultivation Declaration (area emerged)

the Harvest Declaration (area harvested).

The areas declared may be subject to a reduction following field inspections by officials of the Agriculture departments.

Sheep Dips

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the chemicals licensed for the purpose of dipping sheep; and what research he has carried out into the effects of each of these chemicals, and the solutions contained in them, used for dipping sheep, on (a) humans, (b) soil and aquatic life and (c) sheep, with particular reference to genetic damage caused. [136207]

Ms Quin: The exact formulations of veterinary medicinal products are subject to commercial confidentiality. The only active ingredients authorised for use in sheep dips in the UK are diazinon, flumethrin, cypermethrin, high-cis cypermethrin and amitraz.

No veterinary medicine is authorised in the UK unless it meets statutory criteria for safety, quality and efficacy. This includes assessments of the risk to humans, to animals and to the environment. All of the active ingredients currently authorised for use in sheep dips have been through such assessments and have been shown to be non-genotoxic in a range of suitable assays.

Baytril

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the resistance conferring antibiotic Baytril used in treating growing turkeys and chickens. [137179]

Ms Quin: Baytril 10 per cent. Oral Solution is an authorised veterinary medicinal product. It is used only under veterinary supervision to treat bacterial diseases of the respiratory and alimentary tracts in turkeys, broilers, broiler breeders and replacement chickens. No veterinary medicinal product may be marketed in the UK unless it meets stringent criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. For any new antibiotic, data are required to demonstrate the possibility of the development of resistance in susceptible organisms.

The advice of the independent Veterinary Products Committee (VPC) will be sought urgently on the decision by the US Food and Drug Agency's Center for Veterinary Medicines to prohibit the use in poultry of enrofloxacin, the active ingredient of Baytril. Action will be taken on the advice of the VPC.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average farmer's income (a) in Wales and (b) broken down by the smallest regional level for which figures are available, in each of the last five years. [136839]

Ms Quin: The information requested is given in the table. The data are not available at a smaller regional level.

Table 1: Average net farm income for full-time farm businesses in Wales

Net farm income (average per farm)	£000
1995–96	23.2
1996–97	18.7

Flooding (Lewes)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he proposes to take to aid the business community affected by the recent floods in Lewes. [136567]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 November 2000]: I have the utmost sympathy for all those affected by the flooding but no Government assistance is available, either to householders or businesses, as flooding is an insurable risk.

I have written to my hon. Friend the Paymaster General to bring to her attention the concerns expressed by the hon. Member, during the Adjournment Debate on 25 October, about deadlines for VAT and tax returns.

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to amend the Forestry Commission's Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01. [138192]

Mr. Morley: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class X, Vote 3 (Forestry Commission) the Forestry Commission's Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £18,040,000 from £58,025,000 to £76,065,000 £12,600,000 of the increase is the net effect of a fall in receipts from sales of timber offset by savings in other net expenditure, and a further £740,000 has been awarded from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund. These increases totalling £13,340,000 will be a a charge on the Departmental Expenditure Limit Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

An award of £4,700,000 from the Capital Modernisation fund brings the total additional requirement to £18,040,000.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes are proposed to the Departmental Expenditure Limit for his Department for 2000–01. [138191]

Mr. Nick Brown: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) will be increased by £205,550,000 from £1,157,390,000 to £1,362,859,000.

The increase is the net effect of an Intervention Board (IB) increase of £5.393 million arising from delayed costs associated with IT systems and services, the introduction of facilities to UK traders across certain schemes to receive payment in euros in line with the ministerial statement of November 1998 and increased levels of charges paid to agents; and MAFF increases of £54.3 million to implement the Action Plan for Farming; £2.669 million for successful projects under Modernising Government initiatives; £30 million in lieu of End-Year Flexibility (EYF); transfers from the Scotland Office (SERAD) and the Wales Office (NAWAD) totalling £3 million relating to work on the Cattle Herd Registration Scheme; £13 million for implementing the Agenda 2000 reforms; and £9.735 million to repay advances from the Contingencies Fund and a further £90.309 million provision in respect of payments in 1999–2000 and 2000–01 arising out of the Factortame Judgment. These increases are offset by transfers to the Food Standards Agency (FSA) totalling £2.856 million, being their share of MAFF's EYF and funding for work transferred to the Agency following its formation in April 2000.

Within the DEL there will be a transfer of £14 million from MAFF to IB to cover the costs of the Pig Welfare (Disposal) Scheme.

Chardon LL Hearing

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Chapman) of 1 November 2000, Official Report, columns 472–73W, if he will make a further statement on the Chardon LL Hearing. [138193]

Ms Quin: In agreement with Agriculture Ministers in the devolved Administrations, we have asked Mr. Alun Alesbury—the person appointed to conduct the Hearing—to consider adjourning the Chardon LL Hearing until further notice pending further consideration of the testing system used by France to establish distinctness, uniformity and stability.

Details of the French testing system were given in the MAFF press notice of 31 October. Other member states in the EU also rely on French data, and the views of the Commission on the status of the French procedures are being sought.

Trawlers

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many trawlers operate under the UK flag with quota; and what was the figure in May 1997. [137418]

Mr. Morley: As of May 1997 there were some 7,546 licensed UK fishing vessels, of which 2,360 were over 10 metres in overall length. In October 2000 the number of licensed vessels was 6,690, of which 1,939 were over 10 metres.

Cod Catch

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of cod caught in British waters is caught and landed by British trawlers. [137419]

Mr. Morley: The information requested is not recorded.

The United Kingdom has 47 per cent. of the EC cod quota in ICES area IV (North Sea), 53 per cent. in ICES area VI (West Scotland), 43 per cent. in ICES area VIIa (Irish Sea) and 8 per cent. area VIIb-k (English Channel and Western approaches).

Fish Conservation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he will take to conserve stocks of (a) John Dory, (b) anchovy, (c) pilchard and (d) bream. [137417]

Mr. Morley: The revised EC Technical Conservation Regulation 850/98 which came into operation on 1 January 2000 imposes the following requirements for the species named:

Species	Towed gear mesh size[1] (mm)	Fixed gear mesh size[1] (mm)	MLS[2] (cm)
John Dory	80–99	—	—
Anchovy	16–31	—	—
Pilchard	16–31	10–30	11
Bream	80–99	—	—

[1] These bands represent the minimum mesh allowed

HOME DEPARTMENT

Far East Prisoners of War

Dr. George Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many former prisoners of war in the Far East are still alive and reside (a) in the constituency of North West Norfolk and (b) the county of Norfolk. [136796]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 November 2000]: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which my hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces gave on 18 January 2000, Official Report, column 398W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice).

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for changes to the 2000–01 departmental expenditure limits and running costs limits within his responsibility. [138028]

Mr. Straw: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the Departmental Expenditure limit, which covers Class IV Vote 1 (Home Office administration, police, probation, immigration and other services, England and Wales) and Vote 2 (Prisons, England and Wales), will be increased by £756,420,000 from £8,110,836,000 to £8,867, 256,000. The running costs limit will be increased by £177,549,000 from £2,176,135,000 to £2,353,684,000.

The changes are the net effect of the following transfers: £1,000,000 from the DEL Reserve for a project to develop criminal justice IT interface systems; £273,000 to the Lord Chancellor's Department (Class V Vote 1) in respect of a project to develop criminal justice IT interface systems; £150,000 from the Capital Modernisation Fund for funding criminal justice system interface development; £150,000 to the Crown Prosecution Service (Class V Vote 4) for criminal justice system interface development; £275,000 to the Department of Trade and Industry (Class IX Vote 1) in respect of crime reduction programmes; £166,000 to the Welsh Assembly (Class XIV Vote 1) for crime reduction teams; £3,000,000 from the DEL Reserve for confiscated assets; £45,000 to the Department for Education and Employment (Class 1 Vote 3) in respect of the evaluation of the progress drug project; £150,000 to the Department for Education and Employment (Class 1 Vote 3) in respect of the recovery employment project; £1,118,000 from the Capital Modernisation Fund for expenditure on DNA; £492,000 to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Class III Vote 1) for the rough sleepers initiative; £36,000 to the Department of Health (Class II Vote 2) for central treatment fund pilot projects; £352,000 from the Capital Modernisation Fund for grant to the Police Information Technology Organisation for the interface development fund; £303,000 to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (Class III Vote 8) for improvements in the motor registration system; £150,000 to the Welsh Assembly (Class XIV Vote 1) in respect of locks for pensioners; £1,500,000 from the DEL Reserve in relation to the setting up of the Electoral Commission; £150,000 from the DEL Reserve in respect of cross funding for voluntary bodies; £5,556,000 from the DEL Reserve for the Kosovo humanitarian evacuation programme; £666,000,000 from the DEL Reserve for asylum support including unaccompanied asylum seeking children; £113,000 to the Lord Chancellor's Department (Class V Vote 1) in respect of the Immigration Services Tribunal; £3,000,000 from the Department of Health (Class II Vote 2) for asylum support to unaccompanied asylum seeking children; £5,000,000 from the DEL Reserve for research relating to crime reduction programme and anti drugs strategy; £6,000,000 from the DEL Reserve for administrative support costs; £3,747,000 from the civil service modernisation fund; £16,000,000 from the DEL Reserve for the Kosovo special grant; £46,000,000 from the DEL Reserve for police modernisation.

The increase in the Department's running costs limit is the net effect of the following transfers: £728,000 from the DEL Reserve for a project to develop criminal justice IT interface systems; £273,000 to the Lord Chancellor's Department in respect of a project to develop criminal justice IT interface systems; £110,000 to the Department of Trade and Industry in respect of crime reduction programmes; £166,000 to the Welsh Assembly for crime reduction teams; £596,000 from the DEL Reserve in relation to setting up the Electoral Commission; £167,252,000 from the DEL Reserve for asylum support; £113,000 to the Lord Chancellor's Department in respect of the Immigration Services Tribunal; £6,000,000 from the DEL Reserve for administrative costs; £3,635,000 from the civil service modernisation fund.

These changes will be offset by transfers or a charge on the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Controlled Drugs

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to issue guidance to Ministers in his Department on disclosing information relating to the use of controlled drugs. [136481]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I have no such plans.

Myra Hindley

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters he has received (a) supporting and (b) opposing the continued imprisonment of Myra Hindley, since May 1997. [136388]

Mr. Boateng: Prison Service records show that since May 1997 a total of 754 letters have been received from members of the public about Myra Hindley's case. Information on the number of letters which have supported or opposed her continued imprisonment is not recorded centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Police Visibility (Public Places)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with ACPO about improving the visibility of the police in public places. [136463]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I announced to the ACPO Rural Policing Conference in Lincoln on 6 November that I am discussing with the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Association of Police Authorities, how each police authority might better inform the public about the steps it is taking to maintain and improve police visibility and effectiveness in all parts of England and Wales.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy towards delineating along national lines areas of competence in which each state may determine future criminal law rules, in the context of 13.2 of Com (2000) 495. [136470]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer to his previous questions about Com (2000) 495 on 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 519W. At present, we see difficulty in laying down rigid or binding rules for preventing conflicts of jurisdiction between the European Union member states. The experience of Eurojust will help the member states to determine what action is required, if any.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the head of the Recruitment Task Force of the Metropolitan police about his policy on recruiting people previously rejected as below standard. [136477]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I can confirm that no Home Office Minister or official has had any discussions with the Head of the Metropolitan Police Recruitment Task Force.

I understand however that the Metropolitan Police Service's (MPS) Recruitment Task Force has conducted a full review of the minimum standards applied to recruitment with the intention of bringing MPS standards into line with other police forces in the United Kingdom. This has resulted in significant changes being made to align standards to make them more focused to the current needs of the Service and address issues of equal opportunities.

The MPS's guidelines on age, qualifications, convictions, debts, tattoos and employment history requirements have been amended. As a result, applications made during the previous 12 months have been revisited and a number of applicants previously rejected have been invited to resume their applications to join the MPS as a constable.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the (a) establishment and (b) actual available officer numbers for each Metropolitan police divisional force for the last year period for which statistics are available; and if he will make a statement. [134990]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 6 November 2000]: The information requested has been provided by the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police Service. Each division of the Metropolitan police has a Police Budgeted Workforce Total which is set at 1 April. The divisional strength figures are those for 31 October 2000. Actual divisional strength fluctuates because of wastage and recruitment variations.

At the end of October 2000, the Metropolitan police had 25,267 police officers. Those not assigned to Divisions, of which there are 8,855, are on other duties, such as specialist squads, traffic division and other centralised operational support and organisational support functions. Many of these officers will in their other functions be available to enhance the policing of divisions.

European Elections

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the reasons for the low turnout at the 1999 European elections. [136412]

Mrs. Roche: The 'Review of the European Parliamentary Elections 1999', published by the Home Office in May this year, includes a lengthy assessment of the causes of the low turnout at that election. A copy is available in the Library; it is also accessible on the Home Office website: www.homeoffice.gov.uk.

EU Administrative Law

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those areas of administrative law for which he supports the establishment of common minimum standards at EU level. [136467]

Mrs. Roche: Where the European Union (EU) Treaties provide for EU-level co-operation in areas of administrative law, the United Kingdom would support measures based on the establishment of common minimum standards on a case-by-case basis where they provided the most appropriate means of co-operation.

Scarman Centre

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what links the Scarman Centre has with police forces in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [136466]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Scarman Centre has various formal and informal links with United Kingdom police services.

The Scarman Centre provides accreditation and some academic input for the International Commanders Programme, which is run by the International Police Studies Department at National Police Training, Bramshill. The Centre also provides the academic framework for the new-style Accelerated Promotion Course (APC) which began in September 2000 and will be the awarding body for the MSc in Police Leadership and Management which may be awarded to students who successfully complete the whole APC programme.

The Scarman Centre has links with West Midlands Police who are providing consultancy to a Department for an International Development funded research project being conducted in Russia on crime reduction. The Centre also has links with the Metropolitan Police who are providing consultancy to a Foreign Office funded research project being conducted in the Ukraine on community policing.

The Scarman Centre maintains informal contacts for the purposes of research with a number of police forces in England and Wales.

Under the terms of the Home Office contract with Ionann Management Consultants Limited for the provision of Community and Race Relations training to the police service, the Scarman Centre is providing independent research and evaluation of the effectiveness of the Community and Race Relations training and consultancy being provided by Ionann.

In addition the Scarman Centre has police officers enrolled on its degree programme in policing, criminal justice, security management and risk, crisis and disaster management.

Young Offenders Institutions

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the average number of out of cell hours for juveniles and young offenders on remand in each young offenders unit in England; [136657]

(2) what is the average number of out of cell hours for convicted juveniles and young offenders in Feltham Young Offenders Unit and for each of the other young offenders units in England. [136547]

Mr. Boateng: The Prison Service does not collect separately the number of out of cell hours for sentenced and remand prisoners.

The table gives the average weekday time out of cell for September 2000 for all prisoners in those establishments in England which hold male juveniles or young offenders. Figures are provisional and subject to validation by prisons.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the offences for which juveniles and young offenders on remand in Feltham Young Offenders Unit have been charged over the last two years. [136653]

Mr. Boateng: This information is not available.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is held on the previous convictions of remand and convicted prisoners in Feltham Young Offenders Unit. [136524]

Mr. Boateng: Details of previous convictions are obtained either from the court or from the Police National Computer and held on the individual prisoner's file.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of juveniles and young offenders in Feltham Young Offenders Unit sharing a cell designed for one person (a) at the latest date for which figures are available and (b) for each quarter since 1999. [136659]

Mr. Boateng: The information is in the table:

Only young offenders share cells designed for one person.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many juveniles were on remand in Feltham Young Offenders Unit in each quarter since January 1999; and what percentage they constituted of the total number of prisoners; [136651]

(2) how many offenders between 18 and 21-years-old are on remand in Feltham Young Offenders Unit for each quarter year since January 1999 in (a) actual terms and (b) as a percentage of the total number of prisoners. [136667]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is given in the table.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies he has conducted into the benefits of staffing young offender units with officers specifically trained in child and youth care. [136548]

Mr. Boateng: There have been no formal studies of the benefits of training staff who work with young offenders in child and youth care. However, both the Prison Service and the Youth Justice Board recognise the value of ensuring that staff working with young offenders have appropriate training.

Joint training, commissioned by the Youth Justice Board, has been undertaken by staff working with young offenders in the juvenile secure estate. This included Youth Offending Team staff as well as those working in Prison Service establishments, Local Authority Secure Units and Secure Training Centres.

The recruitment process for new prison officers to work in the under-18 estate has also been enhanced with additions to the competence questionnaire which forms part of the application form, and additional exercises at the job simulation assessment centres.

The Prison Service also trains staff in understanding adolescence through a programme designed by the Trust for the Study of Adolescence.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines his Department has issued on the sharing of cells by inmates in young offender institutions. [136658]

Mr. Boateng: Prison Service policy on cell sharing and the separation of different classes of prisoner remains as set out in Instruction to Governors 48–1995 issued on 11 May 1995, a copy of which is in the Library.

Following the murder in March of a young offender in his cell by his cellmate in Her Majesty's Young Offender Institution Feltham, the establishment immediately introduced a risk assessment system to try to prevent a recurrence. The Prison Service has refined that system in the light of experience with a view to introducing it at other prison establishments.

More generally, we are currently looking at several ways to make prison establishments as a whole safer places. The Prison Service will shortly be launching the safer prisons standard which emphasises this "whole prison" approach: it will not only set out required actions on the reduction of violence and bullying in establishments, but will also look at the care of prisoners and staff/prisoner relationships.

The Prison Service has also improved the way in which the risk posed by individual prisoners is conveyed. The revised Prisoner Escort Record (PER), which accompanies every prisoner from court or when they are moved from another prison, is used to highlight different risk factors, including violence, potential hostage taking, racist behaviour or crimes such as stalking/harassing or sexual offences. The new guidance issued at the same time highlights the importance of ensuring this information is passed as soon as possible to the relevant staff and is used to inform decisions about, for instance, first night risk assessment and accommodation issues.

Stasi (British Agents)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of whether all information relevant to British secret Stasi agents has been made available by the United States from its Operation Rosewood archive; [136248]

(2) if he will make a statement about Security Service investigations into the monitoring of (a) pro-NATO activists and (b) the former Social Democratic Party by British Stasi agents; [136252]

(3) what use was made of information gained in Operation Rosewood to acquire further evidence against British Stasi spies in order to pursue prosecutions; [136266]

(4) if files obtained by the UK security services showing the identities of British agents of the Stasi will be preserved for the future use of historians; [136267]

(5) for what reason no action has been taken against any British agents now known to have covertly worked for the East German Intelligence Service. [136250]

Mr. Straw: I can add nothing further to the written answer that I gave the hon. Member on 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 610W. On the question of the release of Security Service files into the public domain, I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Ms Russell) on 29 July 1998, Official Report, columns 251–54W. It would not be appropriate to comment further on the work of the security and intelligence agencies.

Police (Lancashire)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 445W, on Lancashire Police, what changes in (a) to (d) have occurred since 4 April. [136860]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Lancashire Constabulary does not have a target establishment. I understand from the Chief Constable that there were 3,229 police officers in the Lancashire Constabulary on 6 November 2000. She has also told me that on the same day, 165 police officers were recorded by the Constabulary as absent from duty through sickness and 135 officers had formal restrictions placed upon the range of duties they are physically or psychologically able to perform. This latter figure does not include temporary arrangements made locally within the force as and when required.

The number of officers reported to be on light duties has changed significantly since the figure reported in my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary's answer to the right hon. Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 4 April 2000, Official Report, column 445W. The Chief Constable informs me that this is due to changes in the definition of light duties by the force, which now also defines recuperative and restricted duties as "light duties".

Certificate of Identity

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in which countries with which the UK maintains diplomatic relations, the Home Office Certificate of Identity is accepted as a valid travel document by the relevant authorities; [135758]

(2) if he will urgently replace, for grantees of exceptional leave to remain, the Home Office Certificate of Identity with a travel document accepted by all other EU member states. [135998]

Mrs. Roche: The Home Office Certificate of Identity (CID) is a travel document issued to foreign nationals, other than refugees, who are resident in the United Kingdom and cannot obtain a passport from their national authorities. This type of document is not issued under an international convention but on a discretionary basis. The CID, which guarantees the holder return to the United Kingdom, has traditionally been widely accepted for travel and, as far as I am aware, still is. However, it is for the authorities of each country to decide whether they will accept the CID as a valid form of travel document and, in this connection, I am aware that a number of European Union partners are no longer doing so. My officials are in discussion with colleagues from the European Union countries concerned in order to identify their particular concerns and, if possible, give assurances, which might encourage them to accept the CID for travel.

There are no proposals to replace the CID, which was created specifically to meet the travel needs of that category of foreign national described. The issue is one of acceptability of the document rather than replacement and it is that which we are addressing with our European partners.

Firearms

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action the Government are taking to reduce the availability and use of illegally held firearms; and if he will make a statement. [135808]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 30 October 2000]: The Government are committed to supporting the police and Her Majesty's Customs in their work to combat illegal firearms. Measures that form part of our strategy to deal with illegal firearms include:

Good security of legally held firearms to prevent them from being stolen;

Stricter controls on de-activated weapons to prevent them being restored to working order. The Firearms Consultative Committee (FCC) has put forward a range of proposals for improving controls on deactivated firearms;

Proactive intelligence gathering on sources of weapons used in crime through the Forensic Science Service (FSS), the National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS) and HM Customs and Excise;

Stronger intelligence sharing between the enforcement authorities and the reputable gun trade;

Targeted policing measures against particular groups of criminals associated with armed violence, for example known armed robbers;

Local and possibly national amnesties to reduce the number of illegal guns in the 'grey market' which might fall into criminal hands;

The establishment of a national database of certificate holders and the possibility of recording the registration details of all legally-held firearms.

The Government are also supporting international efforts to negotiate a United Nations protocol against the illicit manufacture of and trafficking in firearms.

While firearms crime is a serious problem, it remains a small proportion of overall crime figures. Action against illegal firearms should not and will not be taken in isolation from other criminal activities that may be linked with the illegal possession of firearms, for example the drugs trade.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to encourage the return of Kosovans from the UK to Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [136797]

Mrs. Roche: Since the peace agreement was signed in Kosovo in June 1999, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has judged that it is safe for the majority of Kosovan Albanians to return to Kosovo.

The focus of Government policy toward those Kosovan Albanians who came to the United Kingdom either under the Humanitarian Evacuation Programme (HEP) or independently has been and continues to be to encourage and assist their voluntary return to Kosovo. To this end a permanent Kosovan voluntary assisted return programme was funded which ran from 26 July 1999 to 25 June 2000. This has been followed by a general voluntary assisted returns programme open to all nationalities including Kosovans which provides returnees with advice and a return air ticket.

Labour Conference, Brighton

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much grant was given to Sussex Police for the cost of policing this year's Labour Party Conference at Brighton. [136551]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Sussex Police Authority will receive a special grant of up to £1.6 million towards the additional costs they expect to incur in connection with the policing of this year's Labour Party Conference. The grant will be paid on receipt of the Police Authority's formal claim. This is normally received towards the end of the financial year.

Travellers

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend the law relating to travellers. [136410]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Chapter 5 of the joint Home Office and Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions guidance document "Managing Unauthorised Camping" has been revised and published in order to clarify the confusing issue of "toleration" of unauthorised encampments of travellers. Further research is being undertaken into the effectiveness of the guidance, which will inform any further changes.

While I would not rule out new legislation if that proved necessary to deal with nuisance and crime associated with unauthorised encampments, I am not at present convinced that changes in the law are required.

Money Laundering

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the organisations under his control which he will assign to the National Centre for Combating Money Laundering as set out in section B.8 of the Justice and Home Affairs Meeting on 17 October. [136472]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The joint Council of European Union Justice, Finance and Interior Ministers, held in Luxembourg on 17 October, endorsed the need for the fight against money laundering to be conducted on the basis of a multi disciplinary and co-ordinated preventive and repressive approach. The joint Council also concluded that, if this were appropriate, this objective should be achieved in Member States through the creation, or strengthening, of national multi-disciplinary bodies specifically dedicated to the fight against money laundering. The Government are satisfied that in the United Kingdom these objectives are fully met by the Economic Crime Unit of the National Criminal Intelligence Service and that no organisational or other changes will be necessary.

Banking Secrecy

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effect on banking secrecy of the conclusions of the Justice and Home Affairs Council of 17 October. [136386]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The joint Council of European Union Justice, Interior and Finance Ministers on 17 October reaffirmed the view that bank secrecy should not be able to be invoked in the member states to frustrate criminal investigations. The Government fully share that view and, under United Kingdom law, evidence can be obtained, if necessary by means of a court order, regardless of any question of bank secrecy.

Political Groups (Foreign Funding)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to investigate funding of political groups in the UK by foreign intelligence agencies, with particular reference to the former Communist Party of Great Britain. [136265]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Bill will ban the foreign funding of political parties in the United Kingdom.

Cannabis

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Health on the advantages and disadvantages of legalising cannabis. [136233]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I have had no such discussions.

Hinduja Family

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account he took of the investigations into the involvement of members of the Hindiya family in the Bofors scandal in India, when he approved G. P. Hindiya's and S. P. Hindiya's applications for British citizenship in 1998 and 1999. [136264]

Mrs. Roche: I presume the hon. Member is referring to the applications for naturalisation made by Mr. G. P. Hinduja and Mr. S. P. Hinduja.

We were aware of allegations involving members of the Hinduja family made in 1990 but no action had been taken regarding them, by the time the decisions were made.

Freemasons

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that police officers must disclose whether they are freemasons. [136276]

Mr. Charles Clarke: My right hon. Friend will make a decision about this following the current Home Office consultation of the police service about how to make acceptable arrangements for registration and disclosure of freemasonry membership by police officers. A copy of the consultation document has been placed in the Library.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce measures to regulate wheel clamping on private property. [136668]

Mr. Charles Clarke: In the White Paper "The Government's Proposals for Regulating the Private Security in England and Wales", issued last year, we announced proposals to regulate wheel clampers as part of a package of statutory measures for the private security industry as a whole. We have been considering the responses we received to the White Paper and will introduce legislation as soon as Parliamentary time allows.

Race Relations (Amendment) Bill

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the provisions of the Race Relations (Amendment) Bill will alter the responsibilities of chief officers of police to ensure that ethnic officers and civilian staff have fair treatment and equal opportunities for promotion and for allocation to specialist units. [137205]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The provisions of the Race Relations (Amendment) Bill will, once enacted, impact upon the responsibilities of Chief Officers of Police in a number of ways. First, they will make it unlawful for them and their officers to racially discriminate when enforcing the law. They are already covered with regard to their employment function and to the extent to which they provide goods, facilities and services. Secondly, Chief Officers of Police will be made vicariously liable for acts of racial discrimination by officers under their direction and control. Thirdly, Police Authorities are made subject in the Bill to the new duty to be placed upon specified public authorities to work towards the elimination of unlawful racial discrimination and to promote equality of opportunity and good relations between persons of different racial groups. This duty will cover functions performed by Chief Officers' of Police other than operational ones by virtue of their implementation of Policing Plans under the Police Act 1996. Consideration is currently being given to whether Chief Officers of Police should be listed themselves in respect of their operational functions which fall outside those plans, using the order making powers contained at section 71(5) of the Bill.

The Bill will therefore reinforce the responsibilities of Chief Officers of Police to ensure that ethnic minority police officers and civilian staff and, indeed, members of the public are not discriminated against on racial grounds.

Duke of Buccleough

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available records relating to the wartime internment of the Duke of Buccleough; and if he will make a statement. [136949]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I understand that the Home Office does not hold any records relating to the Duke of Buccleough.

Stop and Search Powers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each of the police forces which have declared areas for use of stop and search powers under section 60 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 during this year, what has been the largest area to which the powers have been applied. [137171]

Mr. Charles Clarke: This information is not collated centrally. Use of powers under section 60 is an operational matter for individual chief officers of police.

Oakington Reception Centre

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum cases have been housed in Oakington reception centre; and what the outcome was of the decisions made in these cases. [136920]

Mrs. Roche: Since the Oakington reception centre opened on 20 March, it has housed 1,935 principal applicants and 310 dependants up to 27 October. At that date, 1,611 decisions had been made on the asylum claims lodged by the applicants, of which 1,595 were refused and 16 granted either refugee status or exceptional leave.

Criminal Certificates

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the three new criminal certificates will be required by (a) a person seeking employment as a teacher in a primary school, (b) a person applying for employment with the police service and (c) a person seeking a position of responsibility within the Scout Movement; and if he will make a statement. [136801]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 6 November 2000]: Part V of the Police Act 1997, under which the Criminal Records Bureau is being established, does not impose a requirement for criminal record checks. The type of certificate for which a person will be eligible will essentially be determined on a case-by-case basis, measuring the particular circumstances of a position against the criteria. A school teacher would plainly be eligible for the highest level of certificate—an enhanced criminal record certificate—under the criterion of regularly caring for, training, supervising or being in sole charge of persons aged under 18.

Many within the Scout movement would also be eligible for the enhanced level of certificate, although the matter would depend upon the precise nature of the duties and responsibilities. In practice, it is expected that police officers will continue to be subject to separate vetting arrangements, which include additional and more vigorous checks not appropriate to most other occupations.

Criminal Offence Statistics

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many criminal offences were reported in (a) England and (b) Wales in each of the last 10 years in areas defined as rural and urban. [136745]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 6 November 2000]: Details of crime reported to the police are not available. Figures of crimes recorded by the police are collected by police force area. These can include both urban and rural areas, and it is therefore not possible to give the figures requested for crime recorded by the police in rural and urban areas.

However, the British Crime Survey (BCS) does draw a distinction between rural and urban areas. As the sample size in Wales is insufficient to provide a reliable estimate for the area, the figures given are for England and Wales as a whole. The BCS asked about crime reported to the police but estimates of these over time in rural and other areas would also be insufficiently reliable. The figures are on a per capita basis for selected offences since 1991, and are as follows:

BCS incident rates 1991–99 for burglary, vehicle-related thefts and violent crime

	1991	1993	1995	1997	1999
Burglary incidents per 10,000 households
Rural	368	481	468	429	343
Non-rural	781	976	938	859	662
Vehicle-related thefts per 10,000 vehicle owning households
Rural	1,660	1,983	2,052	1,503	1,207
Non-rural	2,912	3,152	3,006	2,368	1,947
Violent crime incident rates per 10,000 adults
Rural	396	511	621	597	462
Non-rural	739	1,017	1,108	887	876

Note:

For the purposes of BCS analyses, rural areas are identified by according ACORN—(A Classification of Residential Neighbourhoods) categories. ACORN classifies households according to the demographic, employment and housing characteristics of the surrounding neighbourhood. Rural areas are defined as those areas falling into Acorn types 1 to 9, and 27.

Railway Vandalism

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the railway operating companies about graffiti vandalism of rolling stock. [134996]

Mr. Charles Clarke: None. However, I understand there is regular liaison between the British Transport Police and train operating companies on this issue.

Property Hot Spots

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police authorities have been classified as property hot spots as part of his plan to assist with police recruitment. [137414]

Mr. Charles Clarke: No such classification is used in relation to plans to assist police recruitment.

Forces are receiving assistance through the Crime Fighting Fund, which will enable them to recruit 9,000 police officers over and above the number they had otherwise planned to recruit over the three years commencing April 2000.

The first ever national advertising campaign aimed at supporting local police recruitment was launched on 30 August. It will be a three-year campaign.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Service

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what work has been undertaken since 1996 for the Court Service by (a) Information Initiatives and (b) Myriad. [137322]

Jane Kennedy: Since 1996, Information Initiatives and Myriad have undertaken the following work for the Court Service:

(a) Information Initiatives: supporting specific IT projects in the Royal Courts of Justice; assisting in the project which set up the Court Service HQ network (SOAP); supporting the Court Service HQ network; assisting in the implementation of the Court Service managing agents system (MANIFEST); assisting the development of a word-processing interface for the Public Trust Office system (TARA); consulting on an Immigration Appeals system; and working on Y2K issues.

(b) Myriad: advising on aspects of a PFI contract; providing support to the Crown court system (CREST); and to the County court system (CASEMAN); supporting the Court Service HQ network (SOAP); working on Y2K issues; assisting with the business case for the jury summoning system (JUROR); carrying out initial work on a bid for the Capital Modernisation Fund; and assisting with IT on the Crown Court Programme.

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to amend his Department's departmental expenditure limit and running costs limit for 2000–01. [138180]

Mr. Lock: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class V, Vote 1, the Lord Chancellor's Department Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £113,252,000 from £2,525,609,000 to £2,638,861,000. The increase is the net effect of take up of End Year Flexibility entitlement of; £10,000,000 to fund additional costs relating to new tasks undertaken by the Legal Services Commission; £6,000,000 to meet publicity and information costs for the Community Legal Service; £6,000,000 in respect of costs for the Public Trust Office Change Programme; £8,600,000 in respect of start up costs for the Children and Family Court Advisory Service and Support Service; £1,900,000 in respect of costs for the Libra project; £1,925,000 for the Invest to Save Budget payment to the Land Registry; £1,586,000 relating to asylum costs; a transfer from the Home Office of £113,000 in respect of contribution towards costs of the Immigration Services Tribunal; a transfer from the Home Office of £273,000 in respect of PHOENIX, a project funded by the Invest to Save Budget; £1,355,000 in respect of an award from the Invest to Modernise Fund; and £75,500,000 from the DEL Reserve to meet additional costs on asylum and immigration.

The running cost limit for Lord Chancellor's Department Class V, Vote 1 will be increased by £53,409,000 from £541,908,000 to £595,317,000. The increase is caused by take up of End Year Flexibility entitlement of; £4,000,000 to meet publicity costs for the Community Legal Service; £6,000,000 in respect of costs for the Public Trust Office Change Programme; £5,300,000 in respect of start up costs for the Children and Family Court Advisory Service and Support Service; £1,900,000 in respect of costs for the Libra project; £1,586,000 relating to asylum costs; a transfer of £6,400,000 from capital grants expenditure to meet costs in respect of the Libra project; a transfer from the Home Office of £113,000 in respect of contribution towards costs of the Immigration Services Tribunal; a transfer from the Home Office of £273,000 in respect of PHOENIX, a project funded by the Invest to Save Budget; £1,355,000 in respect of an award from the Invest to Modernise Fund; £3000,000 in respect of a correction to the accounting treatment for sundry income and £26,182,000 from the DEL Reserve to meet additional costs on asylum and immigration.

The increases will be offset by transfers from the Home Office Departmental Expenditure Limit, take up of End Year Flexibility entitlement, an award from the Invest to Modernise Fund and charges on the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep Dips

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to carry out an epidemiological study to determine the effect of organophosphorus sheep dips on (a) those persons who have been in contact with them when engaged in (i) dipping sheep and (ii) handling sheep dipped with such dips, (b) sheep dipped with such dips and (c) persons handling wool from such sheep; and how much his Department has spent in the last five years on such studies. [136204]

Ms Quin: In October 1995, the Institute of Occupational Health (IOM) in Edinburgh was asked to carry out a three-year epidemiological study into possible ill-health effects in sheep dippers from long-term, low-level exposure to OP sheep dips. This study cost around £500,000 and was jointly funded by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of Health and the Health and Safety Executive. The IOM published their report in May 1999. The Government's Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT) was also asked in 1998 to consider whether long-term exposure to low levels of OPs causes ill-health effects. Their report was published in November 1999. Copies of both of these reports are available in the Library of the House.

A contract has been awarded to the London School of Tropical Medicine to carry out a study involving individuals who have reported ill-health thought to be due to exposure to OPs to the OP Information Network, the Pesticides Action Network and the Northern Ireland OP Sufferers Association. The approximate cost of the study will be £290,000. The Government are currently in the process of commissioning further research to determine the causes of dippers' flu, whether there is a small group of individuals who are susceptible to OPs, what OP mechanisms of toxicity might be causing ill-health due to low-dose exposure and a review of the scientific literature on the effects of OPs on children.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been spent by his Department to establish a diagnostic test concerning the relationship between organophosphorous sheep dips and human health; and what progress has been made to date in this matter. [136232]

Ms Quin: A diagnostic test for the acute effects of exposure to organophosphates by testing for inhibition of the enzyme acetyl cholinesterase has been available for many years.

In addition, research is in progress and further research is being commissioned to examine other possible mechanisms of toxicity in OPs and their biological significance in man.

Sea Bass

Ms Atherton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the effect of the recent five tonne limit on bass fishing by pair-trawlers; [136955]

(2) what recent evidence he has received and evaluated regarding bass stocks off the coast of the United Kingdom; [136956]

(3) what further representations he has received on restricting the activities of pair-trawlers fishing for bass in European waters. [136800]

Mr. Morley: The licence condition restricting landings of bass introduced from 1 January applied to all UK fishing vessels in 2000 and not just to pair-trawlers. With two months of the year to go, no catches by UK vessels have approached the five tonne limit.

I will be receiving from the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science shortly their report on their monitoring of the 1999 and 2000 offshore fisheries. Information on a tagging exercise conducted during the summer in the inshore fishery is also due to be delivered and the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea has recently convened a Study Group to look at the status of North East Atlantic bass stocks. A preliminary report is expected next May.

I have received many letters and other representation from right hon. and hon. Members and their constituents requesting further restrictions or complete closure of the offshore fishery. I will consider what action is necessary in the light of CEFAS' reports and the ICES conclusions.

Integrated Farm Management

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of Government initiatives in supporting integrated farm management. [136792]

Mr. Morley: Integrated Farm Management (IFM) is an important priority for MAFF. As part of its commitment to developing more sustainable farming methods, the Department has put substantial resources into research and development relating to integrated farming systems, much of which has been in association with industry through LINK (a Government-wide scheme for joint funding R&D with industry to meet industry's needs).

My Department organised a seminar involving a wide range of interested organisations earlier this year to review the research results and to discuss the wider promotion of IFM. It was noted that the research results indicate that it is possible to reduce inputs of agrochemicals while maintaining profitability and that IFM can produce environmental benefits in the longer term such as improvements in bird numbers and biodiversity. As a result an industry-led Working Group was set up to consider the options for future promotional activities. This will report back shortly.

Fertilisers

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of the recent rise in fertiliser prices on upland farms. [136838]

Mr. Morley: The impact of the recent increase in fertiliser prices will vary between upland farms depending on the amounts utilised and extent to which alternative inputs such as manures are available.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received on the prices of (a) fertilisers and (b) veterinary products in (i) the UK and (ii) other EU member states; and if he will make a statement. [136845]

Mr. Morley: My Department has received representations on fertiliser prices in the UK from the Fertiliser Manufacturers Association and the National Farmers Union.

My Department has also received representations from a number of interested parties since we announced on 30 March last, as part of the Government's Strategy for Agriculture, an independent review of dispensing of medicines by veterinary surgeons. The Review Group is currently examining the existing dispensing practices for veterinary medicines and their impact on the supply, availability and costs of veterinary medicines. The representations received by my Department have been forwarded to the Chairman of the Review Group for consideration along with all the other evidence it receives. The Review Group will complete its task and make its report by 31 March 2001.

Following receipt of complaints from vets, the Office of Fair Trading (OFT) is currently conducting an inquiry into certain aspects of the supply of veterinary medicines in the UK. The inquiry will consider whether there is any evidence of anti-competitive practices.

Organic Food Production

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much he spent in each of the past five years on (a) organic food production and (b) research into organic food production. [136840]

Mr. Morley: (a) The expenditure on aid for conversion to organic farming in England under the Organic Aid Scheme and the Organic Farming Scheme each of the past five years has been as follows:

1999–2000	12,037,000
1998–99	1,026,000
1997–98	571,000
1996–97	374,000
1995–96	261,000

(b) The expenditure on research into organic farming in each of the past five years has been as follows:

1999–2000	2,035,000
1998–99	1,481,000
1997–98	908,000
1996–97	1,116,000
1995–96	931,000

Flood Defence

Mr. Green: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much of the £51 million extra allocated for flood defence will be available in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02, (c) 2002–03 and (d) 2003–04; and if he will make a statement. [137401]

Mr. Morley: I made a statement to the House on 6 November about the serious flooding that has occurred in England, including an indication of the uses to which the additional funding will be put. The allocation is as follows:

2000–01	2
2001–02	17
2002–03	17
2003–04	15
Total	51

This additional funding will mean that additional flood defence schemes can be implemented, but due to design, evaluation and planning permission, most could not be brought forward until 2001.

Mr. Green: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he took between August 1998 and August 2000 to improve the institutional arrangements for flood defence recommended by the Agriculture Committee's Sixth report of Session 1997–98, HC 707; and if he will make a statement. [137535]

Mr. Morley: The Government response to the report, published on 27 October 1998, set out the reasons why we proposed no fundamental change in the present institutional arrangements for flood and coastal defence. Since then we have, however, worked with the operating authorities—the Environment Agency, internal drainage boards and local authorities—in ensuring the present arrangements work better and best practice is shared. In particular, in November 1999 we published high level targets for the operating authorities to follow and, complementary to this, the Agency has set out how it will apply its general supervisory duty in relation to the work done by the other operating authorities. The Government have also instituted a review of the funding arrangements for the flood and coastal defence which is expected to be completed by September 2001.

The proposed Water Bill, on which the Government are currently consulting, will include amendments to the Environment Act 1995 to allow the creation of additional regional flood defence committees. This will facilitate any future decision to create a single tier of committees, at regional level, as recommended by the Agriculture Committee.

Trawlers

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research the Spanish vessels at Newlyn are carrying out; and what net size they are using. [137415]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 9 November 2000]: The Spanish vessels to which the right hon. Member refers last berthed at Newlyn on 23 October. They are now understood to be in France. They are searching for anchovy and other non-quota species in ICES Areas VIIe and VIId (the English Channel).

It is understood that the skippers intend to use mesh sizes appropriate for the species targeted. These are set out in EC Council Regulation 850/98.

Fishing Rights

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what rights UK fishermen have to fish in Spanish waters. [137416]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 9 November 2000]: UK registered fishing vessels have no rights to fish in Spanish territorial waters and fishing opportunities in other waters under Spanish jurisdiction are limited by virtue of Western Waters effort restrictions and TACs and Quota regulations. Spanish vessels also face restrictions in UK territorial waters.

GM Crops

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the first GM crop was planted in the United Kingdom under (a) a part B consent and (b) a part C consent. [136683]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 6 November 2000]: I have been asked to reply.

In the United Kingdom, the first GM crop plant to be released under a consent issued in accordance with Part B of Directive 90/220/EEC was in April 1993. It was an oilseed rape modified for fungal tolerance. However, over the previous five years a number of different GM crop plants had been released under the interim arrangements which were in place before the Genetically Modified (Deliberate Release) regulations came into force on 1 February 1993.

The first GM crop to be planted in the United Kingdom under a part C consent was a herbicide tolerant oilseed rape. The consent was issued in February 1996 for seed production purposes only and not for general cultivation. The legislation does not require the location and time of sowing of crops covered by Part C consents to be notified to the authorities and we do not hold this information. However, we do have an assurance from Aventis, who hold this consent, that no plants have been grown in the UK under this consent since 1997.

Information on all the consents for GM crops issued in the United Kingdom is available on the public register held in my Department.

TREASURY

Taxation Reform

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures have been recommended in the EU's draft report on taxation reform; and what response Her Majesty's Government have made to them. [136780]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 6 November 2000]: There are no current Commission proposals of this form. EC proposals for legislation are considered by the European Scrutiny Committee, and Explanatory memorandums concerning existing proposals on taxation are in the Library.

Employment Tax Credit

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on the introduction of an employment tax credit in 2003. [137060]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 7 November 2000]: The 2000 pre-Budget Report reaffirms the Government's intention to introduce an employment tax credit, as a complement to a new integrated system of support for children. The new tax credits will be introduced from 2003, subject to the legislative timetable.

VAT (Historic Buildings)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to set a zero VAT rate for repairs to historic buildings; and if he will make a statement. [136995]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 8 November 2000]: EC agreements mean that we cannot introduce any new VAT zero rates. However, as the Chancellor announced in the Pre-Budget Report statement on 8 November 2000, Official Report, columns 315–27, I have written to the European Commission on the scope for reducing VAT on repairs to listed buildings that are places of worship.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Parental Leave Directive

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the cost to public funds of the Parental Leave Directive in (a) 1999–2000 and (b) the estimated cost in 2000–01. [136474]

Mr. Alan Johnson: It is not possible to calculate the exact cost to public funds of public sector employees exercising this right since the Parental Leave Directive came into effect on 15 December 1999. As implemented, parental leave is unpaid and there is no statutory requirement to keep records.

The direct cost to the Department of printing and distributing information on the new right to employees and employers in general, and of operating a dedicated public inquiry point for employees and employers in the period immediately following its introduction, has been approximately £40,000.

Imported Fertiliser

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has made to the EU in respect of the temporary tariff on imported fertiliser. [137272]

Mr. Caborn: The European Community has imposed anti-dumping measures on imports of various types of fertiliser from a number of countries; these currently include provisional duties (lasting six months) on imports of ammonium nitrate from Poland and the Ukraine. The decision on whether to impose provisional measures rests with the European Commission after consulting member states; the decision whether to impose definitive (five-year) measures rests with the Council of Ministers, acting by a simple majority.

The Government consider any proposal for anti-dumping measures on the economic evidence presented and against the criteria set out in the European Community's Anti-dumping Regulation. In cases involving fertilisers we give full weight to the impact of proposed measures on both producers and farmers, both when consulted by the Commission and in the position we take in the Council of Ministers.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the impact of the national minimum wage on wage rates in England and Wales. [138011]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Office for National Statistics latest estimates of low pay for spring 2000 (combining New Earnings Survey and Labour Force Survey statistics) show that the national minimum wage is having a direct and beneficial impact on the pay of the lowest paid workers in England and Wales. The latest data also show that it has helped close the gap between the highest and lowest earners and helped reduce the differential between men's and women's pay. This has been achieved without any discernable adverse impact on the economy.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces (Death in Service)

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the posthumous recognition of members of the armed forces who are killed in service. [138265]

Mr. Hoon: I have given careful consideration to a number of ways in which the recognition of members of the armed forces who give their lives in the service of their country might be enhanced. In the light of discussion, I have concluded that the most appropriate would be the erection in central London of a memorial bearing the names of all those killed on duty and by terrorist attack since the end of the Second World War. In accordance with the long established custom for the erection of memorials, I would expect funds to be raised by public subscription. Further consultation will now take place with ex-Service organisations and other interested bodies.

Falklands War

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much time HMS Invincible had to alert other warships to the first Exocet attack during the Falklands war; what action was taken during that time; how much warning HMS Sheffield received of the attack; and if he will make a statement. [137302]

Mr. Spellar: On 4 May 1982, during Operation Corporate, the British operation to re-take the Falkland Islands after the Argentine invasion, the Type 42 destroyer HMS Sheffield was attacked by Super Etendard aircraft carrying Exocet anti-ship missiles.

Some 13 minutes before the missile impact on Sheffield, which resulted in the tragic loss of HMS Sheffield and 20 of her crew, HMS Invincible had detected a contact initially at a range of approximately 180 miles from Invincible which would have been consistent with the Argentine aircraft. However, for the previous few days, the force had experienced a high incidence of spurious radar contacts. These contacts were also assessed as spurious. There were at the time no other indications of impending attack.

Some six minutes before the Exocet hit Sheffield, her sister ship Glasgow detected the radar transmissions of the Exocet carrying aircraft—the first certain indication of imminent attack—and alerted the rest of the force to the threat. The process of detection and assessment absorbed little time and Sheffield thus had five minutes warning of the imminent attack.

Precision Bombing

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to overcome technical problems in the performance of laser-guided bombing by Harrier and Tornado aircrews. [134404]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 30 October 2000, Official Report, column 272W to my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Smith).

Kosovo

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what bomb and mine-clearing operations are taking place in Kosovo; and in how many of these operations British service personnel are involved. [137381]

Mr. Spellar: When KFOR deployed to Kosovo in June 1999, the immediate requirement was to clear ordnance that would have posed a hazard to peacekeeping forces. This was KFOR's responsibility, and British service personnel were engaged in this activity. KFOR also took on the immediate task of making schools safe for the returning population of Kosovo. Two British servicemen tragically lost their lives in performing this vital task.

The United Nations Mine Action Service (MAS) is responsible for the longer term task of fully clearing Kosovo of unexploded ordnance, and has established a UN Mine Action Co-ordination Centre (MACC) in Pristina to this end. The Department for International Development (DfID) has supported the UNMACC with grants, specialist staff and equipment. DfID has also, since June 1999, contracted for five organisations to supply 12 rapid reaction teams to undertake clearance tasks. These UK sponsored teams are now directed by UNMACC.

British troops do not now conduct mine or bomb clearance as a matter of routine, but are on permanent standby for clearance tasks where there is a threat to KFOR. Furthermore, we have authorised the UN to task our teams to support its own efforts to make areas safe for the return of displaced persons by surveying marking and helping clear areas hit by cluster bombs.

The UNMACC state that 2,314 areas have been cleared to date, including minefields, bomblet strikes and other dangerous areas and that there are 1,085 sites remaining to be cleared. UNMACC expect all areas that currently present a risk to life will be cleared by the end of next year.

Strategic Export Controls

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he received between November 1999 and November 2000 on (a) the timing and (b) the content of strategic export controls legislation from (i) non-governmental organisations including voluntary and charitable groups, (ii) commercial interests, companies and trade organisations and (iii) other categories; and if he will make a statement. [136602]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 9 November 2000]: I refer the right hon. and learned Gentleman to the answer which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry gave him on 9 November 2000, Official Report, columns 326–27W.

HMS Argus

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the deployment of HMS Argus on frontline duties. [137909]

Mr. Hoon: The Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessel Argus has been re-deployed from helicopter training duties off the Iberian Peninsular to join the Amphibious Task Group which is providing a presence off Sierra Leone in support of UN and UK forces there this month. The decision to re-deploy RFA Argus, and her three embarked Sea King helicopters, with the Task Group, was taken after the flagship HMS Fearless experienced a fire in her aft engine room which necessitated her withdrawal from the deployment. Her training task will not be affected. Commander Amphibious Task Group continues to lead the Task Group embarked on HMS Ocean.

The integration of RFA Argus into the Task Group will give increased operational flexibility to operations of the Amphibious Ready Group by providing a second helicopter platform from which Chinook and Sea King helicopters can operate to replace the capability lost by the withdrawal of HMS Fearless. The re-deployment of Argus at short notice serves only to reinforce the flexibility of our maritime forces and of our rapid reaction capability.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason pigs have been subjected to mustard gas exposure and a procedure involving a hand-held electric drill in an experiment conducted at Porton Down. [136609]

Dr. Moonie: Sulphur mustard (mustard gas) remains a significant chemical threat, both on the battlefield and from terrorists. The burns that result from contact with sulphur mustard heal extremely slowly and are prone to potentially life-threatening infection. Initial dermabrasion studies involving the use of hand-held abrasive material showed significantly enhanced rates of burn healing and reduced risk of infection. Later work which resulted in even more accurate removal of dead tissue and further improvements in the rate of healing were achieved by the use of a small (1 cm diameter) rotating disc of abrasive material powered by a hand-held, electric drill.

The technical details of the dermabrasion procedure are discussed in the open literature publication at the following reference:

> N. Bennett, D. L. G. Lam, P. Rice and R. F. R. Brown. Dermabrasion—a novel surgical treatment for sulphur mustard burns. Burns. 26 : 34–40, 2000.

Staff at Porton Down are now confident that dermabrasion will help save lives and reduce the suffering in any future casualties.

Although much of Porton Down's work involves the development and use of models, for these particular studies there are no valid alternatives to the use of anaesthetised pigs if the normal healing process is to be measured accurately.

All animal research at Porton Down is conducted under licence authorised from the Home Office. In addition to the statutory controls, an independent body, the Animal Welfare Advisory Committee (AWAC), reviews the arrangements for animal care and welfare at CBD, monitors the research programmes to ensure the highest possible standards and advises on best practice.

European Defence Industry

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Framework Agreement Concerning Measures to Facilitate the Restructuring and Operation of the European Defence Industry, signed at Farnborough in July, will be published and laid before Parliament. [137007]

Mr. Hoon: The Framework Agreement Concerning Measures to Facilitate the Restructuring and Operation of the European Defence Industry, signed at Farnborough on 27 July 2000, was published and laid before Parliament on 1 November.

Defence Aviation Repair Agency

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the contract of the Chief Executive of the Defence Aviation Repair Agency expires. [137573]

Mr. Spellar: The current contract of the Chief Executive of the Defence Aviation Repair Agency notionally expires on 1 April 2002.

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the salary band is for the post of chief executive of the Defence Aviation Repair Agency. [137508]

Mr. Spellar: The Chief Executive of the Defence Aviation Repair Agency is paid within the Senior Civil Service Pay Band 6, the range of which is £68,840 to £107,212.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors he took into consideration in deciding to make RAF St. Athan the Headquarters of the Defence Aviation Repair Agency. [137768]

Mr. Spellar: The factors taken into account were the need to locate the interim Head Office on an existing DARA site and the availability of suitable accommodation at St. Athan.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what targets he has set for (a) employment, (b) investment and (c) stakeholder involvement in the Defence Aviation Repair Agency. [137769]

Mr. Spellar: The Defence Aviation Repair Agency (DARA) is charged with providing a cost effective and flexible deep maintenance service for the armed forces' aircraft. The Agency's level of employment will be maintained at a level justified by its work load and revenue stream. DARA is developing a comprehensive investment plan as part of its programme for launch as a Trading Fund and has taut Customer Service Agreements as well as an umbrella Terms of Business Agreement with its Ministry of Defence customers.

Chinook Crash

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether Sir John Day was aware of the incident at Wilmington, USA in 1989 concerning a Chinook HC1 at the time of the RAF Board of Inquiry into the Mull of Kintyre accident; [137390]

(2) pursuant to his answer dated 23 October 2000, Official Report, column 28W, on the Mull of Kintyre accident, if Sir John Day knew of the Department's litigation against Textron and Boeing regarding FADEC at the time of the RAF Board of Inquiry into the Mull of Kintyre accident. [137350]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 9 November 2000]: As I said in my previous answer, Sir John Day was aware there had been an incident and that legal action was being taken, but was not aware of the detail.

Troop Carriers

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British troop carriers are on lease from Boeing; and at what cost. [137413]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 9 November 2000]: A contract was signed on 2 September for the lease of four C-17 aircraft for seven years, commencing in mid 2001, to meet our Short Term Strategic Airlift requirement. The exact contract price is commercially confidential, but in broad terms we expect the overall cost to be in the order of £500 million, including maintenance of the aircraft. The aircraft will be used to carry material rather than troops.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

English Partnerships

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what financial contribution English Partnerships has made towards (a) the regeneration of the Greenwich peninsula and (b) the Millennium Dome; and how much English Partnerships is expected to receive from the sale of the Millennium Dome. [135552]

Mr. Prescott: English Partnerships' financial contribution to the regeneration of the Greenwich Peninsula as a whole is some £222 million. English Partnerships has made no financial contribution to the construction and fitting out of the Millennium Dome, its contents, or associated buildings and structures.

English Partnerships paid £20 million to British Gas for the purchase of its property interest across the whole of the Peninsula. In addition, English Partnerships has incurred expenditure of £144 million in remediating, servicing, landscaping and providing the infrastructure necessary for the long term regeneration of the northern Peninsula—including provision of the central park and other permanent features. The Environment Agency made a contribution of £2.5 million towards the environmental improvements of the riverwall works. English Partnerships' expenditure included £22.8 million to meet the New Millennium Experience Company's requirements—for which the full amount is being reimbursed to English Partnerships by NMEC.

On the Southern part of the Peninsula, which is already undergoing long term regeneration, English Partnerships has incurred expenditure of some £58 million in remediating, servicing, and landscaping the site, together with the construction of a new school and health centre for use by the existing and emerging local community.

The apportionment of proceeds from the sale of the Dome will be an important factor to settle in the context of the eventual sale.

Seat Belts

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress is being made in his review of policy on children's seat belts installation and testing. [137085]

Mr. Hill: Following my hon. Friends' meeting with my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State on 2 August, we undertook to raise this matter at the Department's next MOT trade liaison meeting. This meeting will be held on 5 December which will enable us to enlist industry's views on what more might feasibly be done in this area.

In parallel with this, we are embarking on a series of measures to aid and promote safety with child seat installation. A radio and publicity campaign will be launched by the Department in February to highlight the need for vehicle owners to check the fitment of restraint belts before they are used. In addition, we will be producing 'credit card' style tips for motorists about child restraints. These cards will be passed on to motorists at MOT testing stations and we will also instruct testers to offer advice on the general condition of child restraints.

Rail Safety (Wales)

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what investigations are being undertaken into the safety of the railway track in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [137175]

Mr. Hill: The Health and Safety Executive's (HSE's) Railway Inspectorate have had meetings with each senior Railtrack zone manager following the derailment at Hatfield to ensure that the zones and their contractors are implementing the criteria for examination and inspection set down by Railtrack.

Railtrack is taking whatever action is necessary to identify all track defects and where they cannot be remedied speedily, the necessary mitigation measures (ie speed restrictions, increased inspection, traffic limitations) will be implemented to maintain the safety of passengers.

HSE is also meeting the senior management at Railtrack HQ on national initiatives being taken to maintain the infrastructure.

Unauthorised Campers

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance to the Environment Agency concerning prosecutions by Agency staff of breaches of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 by unauthorised campers. [136846]

Mr. Mullin: It is neither appropriate nor necessary for my right hon. Friend to issue guidance on this issue to the Environment Agency. The waste management controls of part II of the Environmental Protection act 1990 apply to campers as they do to other members of the public and businesses. It rests with the Environment Agency to take decisions about prosecutions on the facts of each case and the available evidence. Where there is evidence of contravention, we expect the Agency to take action in line with its national Enforcement Policy—which is published on its website http://www.environment-agency.gov.uk/epns/epp.htm.

Civil Aviation Authority

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many inspectors are employed by the safety regulations group within the CAA; and what plans the CAA has to alter their number following the completion of the National Air Traffic Services Public Private Partnership. [137505]

Mr. Mullin: The Air Traffic Services Standards Department, within the CAA's Safety Regulation Group, currently employs 27 inspectors dealing directly with operational safety issues. This figure includes Air Traffic Service Inspectors and Engineering Inspectors, but does not include managerial, requirements production, and administrative support staff.

The CAA currently has no intention to alter the number of inspectors as a result of the completion of the National Air Traffic Services Public Private Partnership. It has, however, recently increased the number of inspectors to deal with the NATS Swanwick Centre approval and preliminary work on the New Scottish Centre Project, and will continue to adjust the numbers of inspectors according to work load, and projected demand.

Road Improvements (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 31 October 2000, Official Report, column 387W, on road improvements (Gloucestershire) if he will undertake feasibility studies for a Nettleton Bolter Relief Road, a gyratory system at the Air Balloon Pub and an extra lane at Crickley Hill. [137607]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 9 November 2000]: The A417 trunk road between Nettleton and the Brockworth Bypass is a particularly difficult section of road for which there are no quick or easy solutions. Any road based solution is likely to be costly and challenging given the environmental constraints of an Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty. The Government Office for the South West is considering with the Highways Agency how the traffic problems of this section of the A417 might best be addressed.

Air Service Agreements

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for further negotiations with his US counterpart on air service agreements; and what timescale he proposes for their conclusion. [137534]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 9 November 2000]: My officials are in regular contact with their US counterparts. We hope to make further progress on securing our goal of a liberalised UK-US aviation market in the coming months.

Farnborough Airfield

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the Ministry of Defence about the sale of Farnborough Airfield. [137969]

Mr. Mullin: Since the early 1990s, the Ministry of Defence had been considering the sale of Farnborough Airfield. The DETR has maintained an interest in developments and there have been a number of discussions at official level between the two Departments on this issue during this period.

Private Hire Vehicles

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Private Hire Vehicles (London) Act 1998 will be implemented in full; and if he will make a statement. [137973]

Mr. Hill: The consultation on the text of the draft regulations and administrative rules for the licensing of London private hire vehicle operators, jointly undertaken by the Department and the Public Carriage Office, has now been completed. Having carefully considered the responses, we are currently preparing the final version of the regulations, which I expect to make this month. Transport for London will be responsible for taking forward the second and third phases of implementation which will cover the regulation of private hire drivers and vehicles.

Green Transport Plans

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the headquarters buildings in his Department which have adopted green transport plans. [137972]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Travel plans have been prepared for all 16 DETR property centres (including Executive Agencies and Government Offices where the Department has management responsibility), covering some 44 headquarters and main buildings.

House Repossessions

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many houses were repossessed in each of the past 20 years. [137833]

Mr. Mullin: The numbers of properties in the United Kingdom repossessed by mortgage lenders in each of the past 20 years is as follows:

Period	Properties repossessed
1980	3,480
1981	4,870
1982	6,860
1983	8,420
1984	12,400
1985	19,300
1986	24,090

Smoke Detectors and Water Sprinklers

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the local authorities that have not installed smoke detectors in their housing stock; [137835]

(2) if he will list the local authorities which have started to install automatic water sprinklers in local authority housing in England and Wales. [137834]

Mr. Mullin: This information is not collected from local authorities, and is therefore not centrally available.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many rough sleepers there were in (a) England and (b) Wales in each of the last 15 years. [137730]

Ms Armstrong: Reliable figures are not available for the number of rough sleepers in England prior to 1998. In 1998 a methodology was developed based on a series of single night street counts and estimates by local authorities to enable this information to be collected. It was estimated that as of June 1998 there were 1,850 people sleeping rough in England in any one night. These figures are updated annually and subsequent figures showed that the number of people sleeping rough fell to 1,633 in June 1999 and 1,180 in June 2000.

Responsibility for rough sleeping in Wales is a devolved matter.

River Pollution

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many grossly polluted miles of river there were in each of the past 20 years; [137826]

(2) if he will list the rivers that failed to reach the EC Urban Waste Water Directive in each of the past nine years. [137828]

Mr. Mullin: The information available on grossly polluted rivers is as follows:

Year	River lengths classified[1] grade F (Bad) in England and Wales (miles)
1999	147
1998	186
1997	281
1996	263
1995	232
1994	254
1993	361
1992	424
1991	—
1990	496
1980[2]	398

[1] The General Quality Assessment (GQA) scheme bases chemical river assessments on three determinants: dissolved oxygen, ammonia and biochemical oxygen demand. Samples are taken at 7,000 sites representing 25,000 miles of rivers and canals. Rivers are classified according to one of 6 grades from "Very Good" (A) to "Bad" (F).

[2] Assessments prior to 1990 were based on a slightly different scheme. These were the lengths classified as "Bad" in that scheme.

The Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive does not set quality standards for rivers. It sets standards for the quality of treated effluent discharged from sewage treatment works, based on the size of the discharge and the nature of the receiving waters.

House Construction

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many houses were built, broken down by (a) local authority, (b) housing association and (c) private sector builds, in England and Wales in each of the last 20 years. [137735]

Mr. Mullin: The latest figures are as follows:

Number of dwellings completed—England and Wales

Year	Private enterprise	Registered social landlords	Local authorities	All dwellings
1980	116,179	20,216	78,537	214,932

PRIME MINISTER

Millennium Dome

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Prime Minister what advice he has received from the Chairman of the New Millennium Experience Company as to the value of the site of the Dome if it were to be demolished; and when. [138017]

The Prime Minister: It is established practice under section II, paragraph 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose such information.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Correspondence

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to letters from the hon. Member for Woking, dated 15 March and 26 September, concerning the asylum case of Mrs. Thu Nga Ly, reference L322968; and if he will make a statement on outstanding asylum applications of people from Vietnam. [137815]

Mrs. Roche: I have written to the hon. Member on 9 November and apologise for the lengthy delay.

Applications from Vietnamese nationals are treated in the same way as similar applications from other nationals. We have committed substantial new resources to speed up the asylum system and as these begin to deliver we expect to see significant improvements in decision times in most asylum cases, including Vietnamese.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of people who have entered the United Kingdom illegally since 1970. [137817]

Mrs. Roche: There is no estimate of the total number of persons who enter the country illegally since, by the very nature of the problem, it is not possible to establish that a person is here illegally until they have been traced and interviewed.

Information is available only on people who have been detected and served with papers as illegal entrants. This information is available from 1973.

The total number of persons detected and served with papers as illegal entrants between January 1973 and September 2000 is just over 150,000.

A more detailed breakdown of this figure for 1989–99 can be found in Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1999, a copy of which is held in the Library. Information on the first half of 2000 is due to be published on 30 November in a Home Office bulletin, a copy of which will also be placed in the Library.

Anti-social Behaviour Orders

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many anti-social behaviour orders have been made (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in Norfolk; [137821]

(2) how many anti-social behaviour orders have been breached. [137820]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Over 100 orders have been made nationally since the measure came into force on 1 April 1999. Six of these have been made in Norfolk. According to provisional figures for prosecutions at the magistrates court and convictions for all courts, there have been four prosecutions for breaches of an anti-social behaviour order up to the end of June 2000. Three of these have resulted in a conviction.

Armed Robbery

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of armed robbery there were in each year from 1990. [137818]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The most recently available information has been published in 'Criminal Statistics England and Wales 1998', and is shown in the table.

Robberies recorded by the police in which firearms (including air weapons) were used

Asylum Seekers

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers whose claims were made (a) prior to 1 July 1993 and (b) between 1 July 1993 and 31 December 1995 have been granted leave to remain, and for what periods, under the backlog clearance exercise; how many granted leave to remain had their asylum applications considered under normal procedures and refused; how many did not receive an initial determination of their asylum application; and if he will make a statement. [134877]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 26 October 2000]: The information requested is given in the table.

Under the backlog clearance measures announced in the White Paper, applications lodged prior to July 1993 where granted indefinite leave to enter or remain without the asylum application being considered, provided they met specified criteria. Asylum applications lodged between 1 July 1993 and 31 December 1995 (6,135) were considered substantively against the normal criteria; however in the event that they failed, consideration was given to granting exceptional leave under extended criteria set out in the White Paper. The number of applications still not determined (15,400) under the backlog clearance exercise is now negligible.

Decisions[1] made under backlog clearance exercise[2]

	Applications lodged prior to July 1993	Applications lodged between July 1993 and 31 December 1995
Granted exceptional leave with immediate settlement	6,135	—
Granted asylum and indefinite leave	—	1,290
Granted exceptional leave to remain for four years	—	14,110
Refused under backlog criteria[3]	445	2,165

[1] Figures rounded to the nearest five.
[2] Cases decided under measures aimed at reducing the pre-1996 asylum application backlog.
[3] Includes some cases where the application has been refused on substantive grounds.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) Kosovans and (b) Albanians were legally admitted to the United Kingdom in each month in (i) 1997, (ii) 1998, (iii) 1999 and (iv) 2000. [136935]

Mrs. Roche: I regret that the available information on passengers given leave to enter the United Kingdom does not separately identify Kosovans (other than the 4,346 Kosovans, including dependants, who were evacuated to the United Kingdom under the Humanitarian Evacuation Programme in 1999). The information that is available for Albania is given in the table.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Albanians (a) voluntarily returned and (b) were removed from the UK in each month since June 1999. [136804]

Mrs. Roche: The requested information is not available.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) Kosovans and (b) Albanians were (i) given asylum, (ii) given exceptional leave to remain and (iii) given temporary admission to the United Kingdom in each month in (1) 1997, (2) 1998, (3) 1999 and (4) 2000. [136936]

Mrs. Roche: The available information is given in the table. I regret it is not possible separately to identify Kosovans within the available statistics for the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Separate records were kept however of the Kosovans who arrived in the United Kingdom under the Humanitarian Evacuation Programme (HEP) between 25 April and 25 June 1999. 4,346 were evacuated and they were all granted 12 months leave to enter.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Kosovans (a) voluntarily returned to Kosovo and (b) were removed from the UK in each month since June 1999. [136790]

Mrs. Roche: Of the 4,346 Kosovan Albanians who were evacuated to the United Kingdom on the Humanitarian Evacuation Programme (HEP) between 25 April and 25 June 1999, 2,396 returned on the Kosovan voluntary assisted programme which ran from 26 July 1999 to 25 June 2000. In addition, records show that 113 Kosovans have returned to Kosovo on the general voluntary assisted returns programme which is open to all nationalities. Individual records are not kept of Kosovans or any other nationality choosing to make their own arrangements to leave the United Kingdom.

Figures are not available on a monthly basis but 25 Kosovans have been returned to Kosovo since June 1999.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the success of the dispersal policy for asylum seekers; and if he will make a statement. [136789]

Mrs. Roche: The National Asylum Support Service (NASS) has now been in operation for seven months. Applications for support and therefore dispersals were lower than predicted. We have revised down the number of bed spaces required from 65,000 to 44,000 for this financial year. However, NASS has been able to extend the new support arrangements to all new destitute asylum seekers earlier than anticipated. The scheme has also been extended to those asylum seekers who prior to 3 April were in receipt of social security benefits but who on or after 25 September receive a first negative decision but who continue to be eligible for support. At the outset the accommodation requirements for NASS were supplied by the private sector and one housing association but NASS has now secured contracts with four local authority consortia and negotiations are at an advanced stage with three more. The dispersal process is bedding down as NASS, the Voluntary Sector and the Accommodation Providers settle into their new roles.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 24 July 2000, Official Report, column 456W, on animal experiments, what measures his Department is taking to ensure that animal welfare is not compromised when project licences are considered and granted while trying to make the process more efficient; and if he will make a statement. [137536]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No changes will be made to the licensing arrangements that might compromise animal welfare.

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for changes to the 2000–01 Departmental Expenditure Limits and running costs limits within his responsibility. [138028]

Mr. Straw [pursuant to my answer, 9 November 2000, Official Report, c. 390–91W]: The increase of £660,000,000 in the Departmental Expenditure Limit, subject to the Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, is for processing asylum cases, detention, and support costs including unaccompanied asylum seeking children. The increase of £167,252,000 in the Department's running costs limit is for asylum case processing.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many decisions the Immigration and Nationality Department made in the last month for which figures are available. [136921]

Mrs. Roche: The number of decisions taken by the Integrated Casework Directorate in respect of applications for asylum, after-entry extensions of stay, right of abode, British citizenship, Travel Document, and European Economic Area cases, was 44,200 in September. This includes cases dealt with by the Public Callers Unit which did not involve a decision, such as a return of passport following a withdrawn application and the transfer of conditions from an old to a new passport.

Licensing Laws

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost to an applicant of applying for (a) a personal licence and (b) a premises licence under the proposals contained in the Government's publication "Modernisation of our licensing laws". [137091]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Appendix 4 of the White Paper "Time for Reform: Proposals for the Modernisation of Our Licensing Laws", published on 10 April this year, sets out a full regulatory impact assessment, including details of our estimates of the fees, costs and charges likely to arise in obtaining both personal and premises licences. We are continuing to discuss these estimates with the Local Government Association and the hospitality and leisure industry, and more detailed work will be needed before final decisions are made in respect of the fee and charges structure.

HEALTH

Recruitment

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what costs the Government expect to accrue as a result of recruiting an extra 6,500 members of professions allied to medicine; and if he will make a statement. [135746]

Mr. Denham: The recruitment of more staff will lead to greater salary and associated costs. Some or all of these costs will be offset by better patient care, reduced turnover, less money spent on agency fees, greater productivity and reduced costs for recruitment activity.

Hospital-acquired Infection

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to combat hospital-acquired infection. [136686]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 6 November 2000]: Action to tackle the problem of hospital acquired infection (HAI) has been set as a "must-do" for the National Health Service and is specifically identified in the National Priorities Guidance. An action plan to strengthen the management and control of infection in hospitals was issued to the NHS in February 2000. Regional directors of public health will ensure that robust infection control arrangements are in place and they are currently assessing progress. All hospitals will take part in national surveillance of HAI from April 2001.

Nurses

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much it cost the NHS to employ agency nurses (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in London, between 1990 and 2000. [137113]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 7 November 2000]: The table shows the total expenditure on non-NHS nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff in England, for the financial years 1991–92 to 1999–2000. These figures include all agency staff and any staff not directly employed by individual trusts and health authorities. It also shows the same information for the London region. Prior to 1994–95 the London region was calculated using the former North East, North West, South East and South West Thames regional totals. Similarly for the years 1994–95 to 1997–98, the North and South Thames regional totals have been used. The information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for the devolved Administrations.

NHS Patients

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what external legal advice he has sought on the responsibility for care of NHS patients transferred to the private health sector. [137111]

Ms Stuart: I can conform that my officials are not aware of any instance in which the Department has sought external legal advice on this matter.

Where National Health Service bodies make arrangements with private sector health care providers for the treatment of NHS patients by those providers, the patients are not transferred to the private health sector. The patient may receive treatment in a private hospital, but the patient remains an NHS patient. They remain the responsibility of the NHS and have the NHS complaints system available to them. The NHS simply uses available private sector facilities. The treatment will continue to be NHS treatment and free to the patient. This will remain the case where the NHS makes arrangements with the private sector in accordance with the recently concluded Concordat between the Department and the Independent Healthcare Association.

Community Hospital (Lymington)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the proposed new community hospital at Lymington. [137932]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne) on 9 November 2000, Official Report, columns 377–78W.

Dystonia

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of people affected by dystonia in the United Kingdom. [137816]

Mr. Denham: The Department does not routinely collect statistics on the prevalence of individual conditions. The Dystonia Society however, estimates that around 38,000 people in the United Kingdom currently have the condition.

Child Workers

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate how many children were working illegally in each of the last 10 years. [137824]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of children employed is not collected centrally. Local authorities regulate children's employment through byelaws which are confirmed by the Secretary of State for Health in England, and the National Assembly for Wales in Wales. It is the responsibility of individual local authorities to ensure enforcement of their byelaws.

Out-patient Clinics (Consultants)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of new patients referred to (a) medical, (b) surgical, (c) oncological, (d) gynaecological and (e) other out-patients clinics were seen by a consultant as opposed to a junior doctor in the last 12 months. [136513]

Mr. Denham: Information is available only on the number of first attendances at consultant led out-patient clinics. This information does not differentiate between new patients who were seen by the consultant in charge of the clinic or by one of the consultant's team.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 5 September regarding a constituent (reference POH(2)5608/53). [135459]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 30 October 2000]: A reply to my hon. Friend's letter was sent on 7 November.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Schools (Sutton)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many bids have been received from schools in the London Borough of Sutton since 1 May 1997 for centrally allocated spending, broken down by (a) capital funding, (b) Standards Fund funding and (c) other funding; how many of such bids have been (i) successful and (ii) unsuccessful; and if he will make a statement. [134887]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 6 November 2000]: Centrally allocated funds, including the Standards Fund and funding for capital work, are usually distributed on a formula basis or as a result of bids from local education authorities, not via bids from individual maintained schools. Non-maintained special schools can bid directly for capital grant, but there are no such schools in Sutton. Until March 1999 grant maintained schools bid to the Funding Agency for Schools (FAS) for capital grants on a rolling programme. Between May 1997 and March 1999, 46 bids from grant maintained schools located in Sutton were successful. The FAS maintained no record of the number of unsuccessful bids.

Since 1997–98 total Standards Fund allocations in Sutton have increased from £1,428,000 to £4,406,000 while capital fund allocations have increased from £5,755,000 to £9,767,000.

University Chemistry Departments

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the university departments of chemistry that have (a) closed and (b) amalgamated with other departments in the period 1980 to 2000. [136164]

Mr. Wicks: This information is not collected centrally. Decisions about closures or amalgamations of departments are for individual higher education institutions.

Individual Learning Accounts

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the measures he proposes to take to speed up the processing of individual learning accounts. [136181]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 2 November 2000]: Individuals receive application packs within seven working days from their first inquiry. They will also receive their Individual Learning Account within seven days of their completed application form being received at the Individual Learning Centre. 200,000 Individual Learning Accounts have been opened by the Individual Learning Account Centre since June. 80 per cent. of these people were sent applications and their accounts within two days.

As the Individual Learning Account Centre became fully operational at the same time as peak enrolment we have introduced a one-off measure to help people whose account did not arrive before they started their course. These special arrangements have been put in place with learning providers to enable those individuals to benefit from a discount. These arrangements apply to people who started their learning by 6 October.

Schools (Internet)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in England and Wales are connected to the Internet. [136214]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 6 November 2000]: 88 per cent. of schools are currently connected to the Internet. The numbers of schools connected are: 15,610 Primary Schools (86 per cent.); 3,470 Secondary Schools (98 per cent.); and 1,100 Special Schools (92 per cent.). In March 1998, 83 per cent. of secondary schools, 17 per cent. of primary schools and 31 per cent. of special schools were connected to the Internet.

For matters relating to schools in Wales I refer the hon. Member to the Welsh Assembly.

Political Debate (Schools)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what obligations in respect of impartiality schools are required to observe when allowing politicians to discuss politically controversial subjects with pupils. [136237]

Jacqui Smith: We regard it as valuable that Members of Parliament and local councillors take an interest in education and look for opportunities to visit schools and meet pupils. From 2002 Citizenship will become a statutory subject in secondary schools, and this will require all pupils to be taught about parliamentary government and the democratic process. Open and informed debate about current issues is, of course, vital for a healthy democracy.

There are, however, legal safeguards in place to protect against attempts at political indoctrination. Section 407 of the Education Act 1996 requires teachers to take all reasonably practical steps to ensure that, where political or controversial issues are brought to pupils' attention, they are offered a balanced presentation of opposing views.

New Deal (Hendon)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many young unemployed in Hendon have suffered a reduction in benefit for non-compliance with the New Deal; [136953]

(2) how many young unemployed in Hendon have refused to co-operate with the New Deal; and if he will make a statement. [137029]

Ms Jowell: Since April this year 10 young unemployed people have received a benefit sanction in Hendon as a result of non-compliance with New Deal. That is the only period for which figures are immediately available.

The great majority of young people taking part in the New Deal do so to improve their employability and find a job without the necessity to impose any benefit sanctions.

University Course Lengths

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of university courses have changed from three years to four years in each of the past five years. [136262]

Mr. Wicks: The information is not held centrally. The available data on course lengths are shown in the following table.

[2] Short, continuing education courses became part of mainstream provision from 1995–96, hence the increasing proportion of courses of less than one year

Zacchaeus Centre, Birmingham

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the work of the Zacchaeus Centre in Birmingham. [136402]

Jacqui Smith: The Zacchaeus Centre has been assessed by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Schools as a unique and successful provision for Key Stage 3 pupils at risk of exclusion from the 10 Roman Catholic secondary schools in Birmingham. The Centre does not cater for permanently excluded pupils. Rates of re-integration are high. That is why we included the Centre as an example of good practice in Circular 10/99 "Social Inclusions: Pupil Support". Unlike the previous Government, we have been supporting the Centre through the Standards Fund: £53,600 in 1998–99 and £94,000 in 1999–2000. The Centre is receiving a similar amount this year and will do so in 2001–02.

Our support for the Zacchaeus Centre complements the increased provision we are making for both in and out of school support. We are making resources available to establish over 1,000 on-site Learning Support Units by 2002. These take disruptive pupils out of the classroom quickly and ensure that they start to behave better. Where an exclusion is necessary, provision for excluded pupils is being greatly increased. There are 1,000 more places and 250 more teachers in Pupil Referral Units than in 1997. Their quality is improving and by 2002 all local education authorities will be required to provide a full timetable for excluded pupils.

Disabled Children

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the availability of funding from his Department for Schools for Parents for parents of children with severe disabilities aged 1 to 5 years. [136820]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 6 November 2000]: There are a variety of funding streams available to schools and the voluntary organisations with which they work, including Standards Fund and the Department's Special Educational Needs Small Programmes Fund. We are not aware of any approach to the Department for funding from School for Parents.

Thurlow Park School, Lambeth

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) when he last visited Thurlow Park School in Lambeth; [137227]

(2) what discussions he has had with Lambeth Council about the proposed closure of Thurlow Park School. [137225]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 7 November 2000]: The Secretary of State and my right hon. Friend the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities visited Thurlow Park School on 2 March this year.

In October 2000, officials from the Department for Education and Employment met officers from Lambeth local education authority to discuss the authority's plans for the reorganisation of educational provision for pupils with moderate and complex special educational needs, including the proposed closure of Thurlow Park School.

Recycled Computers (Wirral)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many subsidised recycled computers will be made available at low personal cost to low-income families living in each of the four constituencies of Wirral over the next three months; [137727]

(2) how many subsidised recycled computers have been made available at low personal cost to low-income families (a) in total and (b) living in each of the four constituencies of Wirral, since March 1999. [137728]

Mr. Wills: I announced the commencement of the Computers Within Reach scheme on 25 october 2000 for those on certain benefits who were seeking to gain or retain employment. The first phase of the scheme will provide up to 35,000 recycled PCs in various areas in England until 31 March 2001. Potential applicants have been asked to contact the free telephone helpline 08080 100 900 in the first instance. The PCs will be delivered following the applications being processed by the relevant regional contractor. I am writing to all hon. Members with details of the scheme and the pilot areas to be covered in this first phase. The PCs will be provided in areas where there are locally based groups that made a successful bid to be part of the scheme. The Wirral constituencies are not in an area currently covered by a bid.

The first phase pilots are located in areas within the following locations: Birmingham, Bradford, Hull, Leeds, Knowsley, Liverpool, London, Manchester, Plymouth, Portsmouth, and Sheffield.

Apprenticeships

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many workers on apprenticeships there were in each of the last 15 years; and what is the estimated number for the next three years. [137733]

Mr. Wicks: Figures from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) on the number of apprentices in employment for each of the last 15 years is given in the table. There are no projections on the number of apprentices there might be in the future.

Sure Start

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to expand Sure Start. [136586]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 6 November 2000]: I am delighted to say that following the Spending Review, the number of Sure Start programmes will be increased from 250 to 500 programmes by 2004 reaching a third of all children aged under four living in poverty. The budget for Sure Start will rise from £184 million a year in 2000–01 to £499 million a year in 2003–04.

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has to amend the Departmental expenditure limit and gross running costs limit for 2000–01. [138397]

Mr. Wills: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates for Class 1, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) and Vote 3 (the Employment Service), the Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) for 2000–01 (excluding Welfare to Work) will be increased by £640,856,000 from £18,355,519,000 to £18,996,375,000.

This overall increase is made up of DEL increases on Votes 1 and Vote 3 of £627,511,000 and £36,075,000 respectively and an decrease of £22,730,000 in non-voted expenditure. As a result, the Voted element of the Departmental Expenditure Limit (excluding Welfare to Work) will be increased by £663,586,000 from £16,806,467,000 to £17,470,053.000. The non-Voted element will be decreased by £22,730,000 from £1,549,052,000 to £1,526,322,000.

The changes in Vote 1 are the result of the take up of £608,950,000 of the end-year flexibility entitlement announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury in Table 7 of the 1999–2000 Public Expenditure Outturn White paper (Cm 4812); transfers of: £1,068,000 to the National Assembly of Wales for mature student bursaries and the administration of the mature student bursaries, of £860,000 to Class XII, Vote 2 (Department of Social Security: Housing, benefit subsidies, council tax benefit subsidies and administration, payments to the National Insurance Fund and the Social Fund and other grants) for intercalating students, of £13,474,000 to the Scottish Executive in connection with Scottish Open University

(OU) students, access funds for Scottish OU students and the European Social Fund (Verification and Audit Service), of £3,738,000 from Class 1, Vote 3 (Employment Service) for Employment Zones, work-life balance, the salary of a Grade 7 lawyer, the new agency policy division, the manual girocheque reconciliation function and ONE marketing, of £3,000,000 from Class II, Vote 1 (Department of Health: Hospital, community health, family health and related services, England) for the Tomlinson project at Queen Mary and Westfield College, of £4,000,000 from Class II, Vote 2 (Department of Health: administration, miscellaneous health and personal social services, England) as a contribution to Education and Health Partnerships, of £950,000 to Class XI, Vote 1 (the Department for Culture, Media and Sport) for dance and drama students; the draw down of £825,000 from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund and the draw down of £23,350,000 from the Department's non-Voted Departmental Unallocated Provision (DUP).

The increase in the provision on Vote 3 is the result of the take up of £35,779,000 of end-year flexibility entitlement; the draw down of £250,000 from the DUP to help fund New Deal Action teams; transfers of £195,000 from Class IV, Vote 1 (Home Office) for the Recovery Employment and Progress Drug Projects, of £3,738,000 to Class 1, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) for Employment Zones, Work-life balance, the new agency project, ONE marketing, legal advice and the manual girocheque reconciliation function and of £2,374,000 from Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security: administration) to cover Decision Making Advice costs connected with adjudication work; an increase of £1,670,000 to cover the cost of administering allowance payments for work based learning for adults in Scotland and Wales (offset by matching increase in receipts); and the draw down of £1,215,000 from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund.

The Departmental running costs limit (excluding Welfare to Work) will be increased by £19,793,000 from £1,072,601,000 to £1,092,394,000. The changes on Vote 1 are as a result of the transfer of £20,000 to the Scottish Executive, the movement of £600,000 out of running costs into programme provision, and the draw down of £825,000 from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund. The changes on Vote 3 are the result of the take up of £17,261,000 of end-year flexibility entitlement, the transfer of £2,374,000 from the Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security: administration), the addition of £1,670,000 to cover work on allowance payments for Work Based Learning for Adults in Scotland and Wales and the draw down of £1,215,000 from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund. The Supplementary Estimates also include transfers of £3,738,000 of running costs from Vote 3 to Vote 1, of which only £806,000 increases the Vote 1 running costs provision.

The Department's Welfare to Work provision is being increased by £111,414,000 from £1,144,281,000 to £1,255,695,000. The increase is made up of changes on Votes 1 and 3 of £90,251,000 and £21,163,000 respectively. The change on Vote 1 is as the result of the take up of £75,472,000 of end-year flexibility; draw down of new provision of £8,494,000; net transfers from Class 1, Vote 3 (the Employment Service) of £6,300,000, a transfer of £15,000 to the Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security) and an increase in running cost expenditure for New Deal Task Force projects and corresponding receipt of £750,000. The change on Vote 3 is as a result of the take up of £13,350,000 of Windfall Tax end-year flexibility entitlement, the draw down of £6,746,000 of Windfall Tax provision to fund additional expenditure on the New Deal for 50plus and the New Deal for Lone parents, net transfers of £6,300,000 to Class 1, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) for New Deal for Partners, Action Teams, The Training Standards Council and the Government Office's financial monitoring of New Deal and of £7,367,000 from Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security: administration) for the New Deal for Lone parents.

The Departmental Welfare to Work running costs limit will be increased by £12,865,000 from £184,011,000 to £196,876,000. The change on Vote 1 is as a result of the take up of £478,000 of new provision, the increase of £750,000 for the New Deal Task Force and the transfer of £15,000 to the Department of Social Security. The change on Vote 3 is a net result of the take up of £7,000,000 of Windfall Tax end-year flexibility entitlement, the draw down of £6,134,000 of Windfall Tax provision to fund additional expenditure on the New Deals for 50plus and Lone Parents and a transfer of £4,550,000 from Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security: administration) for the New Deal for Lone parents. The Supplementary Estimates also include transfers of 6,480,000 from Vote 3, of which only £448,000 increases the Vote 1 running costs provision.

The decrease in non-Voted expenditure within DEL arises from the draw down of £23,600,000 of DUP and an increase in credit approvals due to a transfer from the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions of £870,000 in connection with the overpayment of Annual Capital Guideline to Derby City Council.

The increases are the result of transfers or will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support (Mortgage Interest Payments)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what schemes exist to enable unemployed households in receipt of Income Support covering mortgage interest payments to take up job opportunities available to them. [136815]

Mr. Bayley: In addition to the range of work incentives already available to recipients of Income Support and income based Jobseeker's Allowance, specific help to support home owners moving into full-time work was announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor in his Budget Statement.

From April 2001 home owners who have been receiving Income Support or income based Jobseeker's Allowance continuously for 26 weeks and who have help with their mortgage interest payments will continue to receive help with their mortgage interest for a further four weeks after starting full-time work. This measure will help to ease the transition into work by offering a financial cushion for the first few weeks in employment when people may have to wait for their first earnings: 60,000 home owners are expected to benefit from this help each year with average gains of between £30 and £35 per week.

In addition, we want to encourage home owners to try work. From April 2001 benefit-linking arrangements will be extended from the current 12 weeks to 52 weeks for home owners taking up employment. Home owners will be able to take up short-term or seasonal work secure in the knowledge that if they need to reclaim Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance within a year, they will immediately qualify for help with their mortgage interest payments.

CSA

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the categories of expenditure covered by the CSA maintenance payments. [136811]

Angela Eagle: Child support maintenance assessments, which set the level of child support liability, do not specify categories of expenditure covered by maintenance payments. It is for the parent with care to decide how best to spend the money in the interests of her children.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many men have been eligible to receive a backdated Winter Fuel Payment, broken down into those who (a) have received the payment and (b) are still waiting to be paid. [135720]

Angela Eagle: Following the changes made to the Winter Fuel Payment scheme, the number of men who may now be eligible for payments in respect of previous years is around 1.7 million.

Payments in respect of previous years must be claimed and it is open to those who are now eligible to choose whether they wish to make a claim.

An information campaign has been running since April to inform potential customers about the changes to the scheme and what, if anything, they need to do.

To date, we have received 950,000 claims from men who have chosen to claim these payments, and around 930,000 payments have already been issued in respect of these claims. Outstanding claims from this group (currently estimated to be around 15,000) are being dealt with and payments will be issued on successful claims, in early December. Claims for past winters are not subject to any time limits and we continue to receive them daily.

War Pensions

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the changes made to the level of war pensions in each of the last 20 years; and what was the cost or saving to public funds of each change. [137836]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the tables.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Museums and Galleries

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what additional funding he is making available to museums and galleries sponsored by his Department over the next three years; what provision this additional funding includes for free access and quids-in at the charging museums; what resources he has set aside in reserve for further allocation; and if he will list the resources that he is making available. [138398]

Mr. Chris Smith: I am increasing the funding available for the museums and galleries sponsored by my Department from £229 million this year to £275 million in 2003–04. Included in the increase is additional capital funding of £10 million in 2002–03 and 12 million in 2003–04. Not all of this funding has yet been allocated.

The bulk of the extra revenue funding available is to support the continuation of free access for children and pensioners at the charging museums and to provide compensation for the introduction of quids-in (a reduced charge of £1 for adults) from 1 September 2001.

Within the total I have allocated £7 million in 2003–03 and £8 million in 2003–04 for urgent capital repairs. I am holding back £3 million of capital funding in 2002–03 and £4 million in 2003–04 from which I shall invite bids for improvement projects and I am also holding back £4 million of revenue funding in 2002–03 and £10 million in 2003–04 to meet particular requirements as they arise.

The allocations made for 2001–02 to 2003–04 are set out in the table for comparison with the allocations for 1998–99 to 2000–01 and show the significant increase achieved. The table does not include the funding for work in the regions which I announced in the House on 25 July 2000.

National Lottery Grants Review

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the review of the National Lottery grants application process is due to be published. [137767]

Kate Hoey: The Quality, Efficiency and Standards Team (QUEST) published the first phase of its review of Lottery application processes on 3 August. The report focuses on applications for grants of up to £100,000 and includes recommendations for improving application and assessment procedures in order to ease the administrative burden for small organisations applying for grants. Copies of the report are available in the Library of the House. QUEST will shortly begin the second phase of its work, which will investigate the costs inherent in the application process for larger grants, both to applicants and Lottery distributors.

Athletics Stadium

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the value is of public funds (a) spent and (b) committed, to date, on the proposal to build an athletics stadium at Picketts Lock. [137838]

Mr. Chris Smith: No Exchequer funding has been committed to the development of the National Athletics Stadium at Picketts Lock. The English Sports Council have so far far made a grant of £240,000 from the Sports Lottery Fund towards initial feasibility studies. On 6 November, the English Sports Council agreed to provide a further grant of £1.3 million towards the costs of design, site investigation, and cost planning.

Wembley National Stadium Ltd.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the legal position in relation to the agreement between Wembley National Stadium Ltd. and Sport England concerning the return of Lottery funds to Sport England. [137840]

Mr. Chris Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 30 October 2000, Official Report, column 328W.

CABINET OFFICE

Better Regulation Task Force

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what recommendations the Better Regulation Task Force made in respect of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000. [136448]

Mr. Stringer: The independent Better Regulation Task Force supported the overall aim of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 to legislate to combat serious crime conducted on the internet. It was concerned that, like all other new Government regulation, it should meet the five principles of good regulation: transparency; accountability; consistency; proportionality; and targeting. The Bill was amended considerably during its passage and the Task Force's concerns were broadly met. The Task Force nevertheless hopes that the Home Office will review the effectiveness of the Act in time, taking account of its impact on UK e-businesses.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what estimate she has made of the amount the Better Regulation Task Force has saved business; and if she will make a statement. [136449]

Mr. Stringer: The independent Better Regulation Task Force is an advisory body and can not itself directly reduce costs on business. It works by making recommendations, including to Government. To date, the majority have been accepted. Since its creation in 1997, the Task Force has influenced many changes in the regulatory environment. For example, all new regulation must be checked against the principles of good regulation developed by the Task Force.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement in respect of the administrative and running costs of the Better Regulations Task Force, including the autumn 2000 Task Force review. [136606]

Mr. Stringer: The administrative and running costs of the independent Better Regulation Task Force for the six months of the financial year 2000–01 to September 2000 have totalled £191,581. The printing costs of the Better Regulation Task Force's Annual Report 1999–2000, which was published in October 2000, were £6,815.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

UK Sports Institute

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress has been made on the establishment of the UK Sports Institute. [135647]

Kate Hoey: The UK Sports Institute's aim is to provide our best sportsmen and women with the facilities and support services that they need to compete and win at the highest level. It will provide much needed world class facilities and a higher standard of co-ordinated support services than the UK has ever had before.

Recruitment of the key staff of the UKSI Central Services team has been completed. From November 2000, sports will have access to the technical, operational and programme support provided through the UKSI Central Services Team.

The UKSI is also made up of a network of Institutes operated by the home country sports councils. The establishment of the English Institute of Sport of the UKSI is on-going. The Badminton Centre in Milton Keynes, the Aquatics Centre and the Velodrome in Manchester and the Ice-Centre in Nottingham are already available to athletes. In May-June 2000, the water-based hockey pitches in Birmingham and Cannock were among the first completed new projects. At Loughborough, Lottery funding of up to £2.1 million has been agreed for the development of swimming facilities, an indoor athletics centre, international hockey pitches, a gymnastic centre, facilities for badminton and netball together with athlete support services. Over £50 million of new Lottery funding has been committed by Sport England to date for additional facilities for the English network. It is expected that the majority of the remaining Lottery applications, representing over £60 million of further investment in network facilities in England, will be made in the next six months. Once the full building programme has been completed, there will be over 80 facilities that go to make up the English Institute of Sport network.

In addition, the UKSI Scottish Institute of Sport, funded by Sport Scotland, has been established and operating for 18 months and The Sports Council for Wales has been operating and developing UKSI Cymru for sometime. Both have been providing a range of services direct to athletes including technical training and support, conditioning guidance and supervision, preventive and reactive sports medical support and sports science. The Sports Council for Northern Ireland has identified the University of Ulster as their preferred partner to develop in partnership the UKSI network centre for Northern Ireland. Initial principles of agreement have been signed by both parties and work is under way to identify the most appropriate format to operate the network centre.

Copies of the UKSI Quarterly Update report for August 2000—produced by UK Sport—have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses to provide further information on progress of the UK Sports Institute.

National Lottery

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport for what reason he has not dismissed the National Lottery Commissioners who were in post at the time of the decision which resulted in the resignation of the Chairman of the Commission. [136243]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have no grounds for dismissing the National Lottery Commissioners. The former Chairman of the National Lottery Commission, Dame Helena Shovelton, resigned from the Commission for personal reasons. I appointed Lord Burns to take her place on the Commission, and gave him a clear remit, alongside the other Commissioners, to conduct the selection process with absolute fairness and impartiality between the applicants. The Government have every confidence in their ability to do so.

Millennium Commission

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 476W, what undertaking was sought by the Millennium Commission from (a) the Minister of State at the Cabinet Office, Lord Falconer or (b) the New Millennium Experience Company in return for its most recent award of grant. [137222]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 7 November 2000]: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I will write to the hon. Member in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission, and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Looted Cultural Assets

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what response he plans to make to the proposal of the Vilnius International Forum on Holocaust Era Looted Cultural Assets that Governments establish a central reference point to provide information and help on queries regarding looted cultural assets and claims. [137409]

Mr. Chris Smith: My officials are in contact with Resource (the Council for Museums Libraries and Archives) to discuss the outcome of the study they have commissioned into the feasibility of an advisory unit to offer expertise and advice to help museums, galleries, libraries and archives in handling this issue.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the timetable is for consultation on the case for legislation to permit national museums and galleries to return human remains and objects which were wrongfully taken during the period 1933 to 1945; and if he will list the organisations which are being consulted. [137410]

Mr. Chris Smith: I am currently consulting the Chairman of the National Museum Directors' Conference (NMDC), the Chairman of the NMDC's standing Repatriation Committee and the Chairman of the NMDC's Working Group on Spoliation, together with the Director of Resource and the Director of the Museums Association.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on his plans for the use of the Millennium Dome. [136989]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 8 November 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Cotswold (Mr. Clifton-Brown) on 6 November 2000, Official Report, columns 55–56W.

Chess

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to designate chess a sport. [137992]

Kate Hoey: I have currently no plans. Any decision to recognise chess as a sport would have to be agreed by all four home country sports councils and departments.

Regional Theatre

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has for funding regional theatre in the areas covered by (a) the South East Arts Board, (b) Waverley district council and (c) Mole Valley district council, with particular reference to (i) the Redgrave Theatre, Farnham and (ii) the Thorndike Theatre, Leatherhead. [137687]

Mr. Alan Howarth: This is a matter for the Arts Council of England, as the main funding body for the arts in England, in collaboration with South East Arts, as the regional arts board, to decide within the context of their current review of theatre. The Arts Council have already announced additional funding for theatre from 2002–03, and decisions on how this will be distributed will be made in the near future.

Television Subtitling

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 30 October 2000, Official Report, column 330W, on subtitling for the deaf and hard of hearing on digital, cable and satellite television, for what reason the scope of his Department's review has been extended to include satellite and cable TV; and what other aspects of provision and reception of subtitling, signing and audio description services are also being reviewed. [137919]

Janet Anderson: The review was widened to include other aspects of the provision and reception of subtitling, signing and audio description services in order to inform Government in the development of future broadcasting policy and legislation in this area. Other aspects being considered are the possibilities of different targets for different broadcasters, the prioritisation of certain programmes/channels, the costs of providing and receiving these services and the availability of skilled subtitlers, signers and audio describers.

European Union Baroque Orchestra

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the level of (a) Government and (b) European Communities support for the European Union Baroque Orchestra is. [138084]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The European Union Baroque Orchestra is an official cultural training initiative of the European Parliament and the European Commission, and receives funding from the European Commission's Directorate General for Education and Culture. The orchestra also receives major sponsorship from industry and other organisations and individuals. The level of that funding is for those organisations to determine; no additional support comes from Government.

Government Sports Strategy

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what targets he has for getting more people regularly to take exercise; and if he will make a statement. [134150]

Yvette Cooper: I have been asked to reply.

Experts recommend that all adults should participate in at least 30 minutes of moderate intensity physical activity five times a week and children should be active for at least an hour every day. In each case, physical activity can include activities like brisk walking, cycling and swimming.

The National Service Framework for Coronary Heart Disease set out key milestones for the implementation of a range of prevention programmes at a local level. These milestones state that, by April 2001, all NHS bodies, working closely with local authorities, will have agreed and be contributing to the delivery of local programmes on physical activity. By April 2002, all local health communities will have quantitative data on implementation of these policies. The Health Development Agency has compiled a guide for implementing the preventive aspects of the NSF. This will be sent to Health Authorities in November and will provide examples of the projects they can set up in order to reach NSF milestones.

Several Government initiatives are promoting opportunities for people to be more physically active. The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has made safer roads a priority in their White Paper 'A New Deal for Transport'. The Department for Culture, Media and Sport have outlined their commitment to improve access to services in their 'Sports Strategy'. There is also a joint DH/DfEE programme to implement the objectives of the 'National Healthy School Standard', which includes physical activity as a component.

Initiatives are in place to promote physical activity among children. The Safe and Sound Challenge, which encourages children to walk or cycle to school along safe routes, has run successfully for two years. In 2000–01, the aim of the scheme will be to offer schools in socially deprived areas the opportunity to develop healthy active modes of travel to school.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Office Furniture

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what the cost is of each item of portable office furniture (a) in offices in Portcullis House and (b) in other offices in the Parliamentary Estate. [136816]

Sir Sydney Chapman: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms; I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

PRIME MINISTER

Biodiversity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those aspects of biodiversity which are potentially under threat as a result of the use of GM crops, to which he made reference in his speech on environmental policy at the Joint Green Alliance/CBI Forum on 24 October. [135436]

The Prime Minister: The Government take a precautionary, evidence-based approach to the possible impact on biodiversity of growing GM crops, whether through the herbicide regime, as a result of gene flow, or some other effect.

Core Environmental Principles

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the set of common values as part of core environmental principles to which he made reference in his speech on environmental policy at the Joint Green Alliance/CBI Partnership meeting on 24 October. [135435]

The Prime Minister: As is set out in the Sustainable Development Strategy, 'A Better Quality of Life', published in May 1999, the Government's core aim is:

> to ensure a better quality of life for everyone, now and for generations to come.

Key values are best expressed by four objectives: social progress which recognises the needs of everyone; effective protection of the environment; prudent use of natural resources; and maintenance of high and stable levels of economic growth and employment.

Chapter 4 of the strategy also sets out 10 guiding principles and approaches which provide additional background on our common values with regard to achieving sustainable development.

More specifically, we need to build a new coalition for the environment that works with the grain of consumers, business and science, not against them, so that we can continue to grow and share the benefits of that growth. However, the negative impact of growth on the environment has to be reduced and a more productive use of environmental resources developed. To do this we need to: address problems at the right level—international, national, regional and local; harness consumer demand, not stifle it; stimulate science and innovation to provide solutions to environmental problems; use environmental resources more efficiently and become a low-carbon, recycling economy; and see protecting the environment as a business opportunity.

Our goal is therefore to combine the benefits of continued economic growth with the creation of a fairer society and a cleaner environment.

Hon. Members' Pay

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Pound) of 23 October 2000, Official Report, column 68–69W, what plans he has to include in the forthcoming review a review of pension arrangements for hon. Members and Ministers and the additional costs allowances. [136420]

The Prime Minister: The review of parliamentary pay and allowances to which I referred in my previous answer will not cover pensions. That is the subject of a separate review which my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House has asked the Senior Salaries Review Body (SSRB) to conduct and which we expect to receive early in the New Year.

In addition to its commitment to review Members' pay this year, I have specifically asked the Review Body to look at the Office Cost Allowance because of representations I have received asking that this be done. I have not specifically requested the SSRB to look at other allowances.

European Federation

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the answer from the Minister for Europe of 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 557W, on European federation, if he will define the difference between the two types of Government mentioned; and if he will make a statement. [137683]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave his hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis) on 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 509W.

EU Council, Biarritz

Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the information EU Council held in Biarritz. [138248]

The Prime Minister: A Statement on the Information European Council in Biarritz was made at the earliest opportunity in the other place by my right hon. and noble Friend, the Lord Privy Seal, in a written reply to the noble Lord Faulkner of Worcester, 16 October 2000, Official Report, House of Lords, columns WA63–65.

I repeated this statement when the House of Commons returned from the Summer Recess in a written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Pound), Official Report, columns 69–70W.

Charter of Fundamental Rights

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his policy towards COM(2000)644. [135578]

Mr. Vaz: I have been asked to reply.

COM(2000)644 is a Commission Communication, published on 11 October, "on the legal nature of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union".

The Commission advocates that the Charter should be incorporated in the Treaties of the European Union. The Government reject this view, and incorporation will not happen unless all member states agree.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Stone (Mr. Cash) on 2 November 2000, Official Report, columns 555–56W.

DEFENCE

Baltic States

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) ministerial contacts and (b) military exchange contacts there have been in the past 12 months with (i) Lithuania, (ii) Latvia and (iii) Estonia; and if he will make a statement. [138094]

Mr. Spellar: We have well-developed defence relations with all three countries. These include extensive contacts at both ministerial and military levels. During the last 12 months contacts at ministerial level have included meetings between the Secretary of State for Defence and the Latvian and Estonian Presidents, a meeting between my colleague the Minister for Defence Procurement and the Latvian Defence Minister, Mr. Girts-Valdis Kristovkis, and my own meetings with Mr. Kristovkis, the former Lithuanian Defence Minister, Mr. Ceslovas Stankevicius, and the Estonian Foreign Minister, Mr. Toomas Ilves. In addition, following a very successful visit to the Baltic States in July 1999, the Chief of the Defence Staff has received senior visitors from Estonia and Latvia. The Chief of the Naval Staff visited all three Baltic States in June this year.

Central to our relationships with all three countries are bilateral programmes of defence co-operation, which form part of our Defence Diplomacy mission. These programmes cover the provision of a wide range of assistance, including advice on defence management, English language training and military training. In addition, my Department supports a number of joint Baltic defence projects, including the Baltic Defence College, located at Tartu in Estonia, the Baltic peace-keeping battalion and the Baltic naval squadron. Our aim is to support the establishment of democratically accountable, cost-effective armed forces capable of contributing to national and regional security and, increasingly, international security through peace support operations.

DERA Porton Down NBC Training Facility

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list for each of the past three years the military units which have used the DERA Porton Down NBC training facility, indicating how much each unit was charged; [136073]

(2) what the cost is to a customer of using the DERA Porton Down NBC training facility; and on what basis it is calculated. [136075]

Mr. Spellar: During the past three financial years, the following military units have used the NBC Training facility known as the Battle Run at DERA, Porton Down.

Financial year	Military units
1997	7 Battalion Royal Electrical Mechanical Engineers (71 Aircraft Workshop) 1 Royal Anglian Regiment Joint Helicopter Support Unit 47 Regiment Royal Artillery 16 Regiment Royal Artillery
1998	Royal Wessex Yeomanry (Territorial Army) 243 Field Hospital Unit 10 Parachute Regiment
1999	Royal Wessex Yeomanry (Territorial Army) 16 Regiment Royal Artillery Royal Household Cavalry

The charge to customers for the use of the NBC Training Facility at DERA Porton Down, known as the Battle Run, comprises range maintenance and manpower operational costs as well as an element of profit as agreed between DERA and MOD in their Terms of Business Agreement (TOBA). The actual amount of usage and the associated cost are agreed on a yearly basis within an agreed limit of liability which is specified in the contract for use. The basis for the calculation of charges for each of the three years and the current year is the same apart from adjustments for inflation, the amounts of which are also agreed between MOD and DERA. The charges to HQ Land Command, the Ministry of Defence budget holder for these units, for each of the three years were £48,928, £42,118 and £51,715 respectively. Costs are not attributed to individual units. Costs include elements for facility maintenance and improvements to overall capability as well as the actual operational cost for the conduct of the Battle Run training.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in each of the past three years on how many days the DERA Porton Down NBC training facility has been (a) available for use and (b) used for training. [136074]

Mr. Spellar: In each of the last three financial years the NBC training facility known as the Battle Run at DERA Porton Down was contracted by HQ Land Command to provide 20 days of training in blocks of two days. The take-up of the sessions was as follows:

Financial year	Sessions
1997	Six two-day
1998	Four two-day
1999	One two-day and two four-day

Ministerial Directions

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer from the Chief Secretary to the Treasury of 23 October 2000, Official Report, columns 73–76W, on ministerial directions, if he will place in the Library the text and supporting documentation of the directions made by Ministers in his Department in 1998 and 2000; and if he will make a statement. [137298]

Mr. Spellar: I have considered this request under the terms of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information and concluded that providing this information would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion within government. The request therefore falls within the terms of exemption 2 of the Code of Practice.

Tomahawk Missile

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which variants of the Tomahawk land attack missile have been purchased by his Department; and if his Department has taken steps to purchase further variants. [137689]

Mr. Hoon: The Ministry of Defence has purchased only one variant of the Tomahawk Land Attack Missile, the Block IIIC, which has a conventionally armed blast warhead. It is currently deployed in RN submarines. Although we are studying future Tomahawk developments, and joint work with the United States Navy has shown that a Torpedo Tube Launch version is possible, we have made no commitment to buying the next generation Tactom Block IV variant.

RAF Coltishall

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of RAF Coltishall. [137930]

Mr. Spellar: Over the next few years, my Department will be carefully considering possible roles for RAF Coltishall once its current task as base for the Jaguar Force comes to an end.

Islamic Terrorists

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the islamic terrorist threat to (a) Royal Naval ships and (b) British service personnel in foreign ports. [137911]

Mr. Spellar: The recent attacks in Yemen highlight the continuing terrorist threat to UK and allied forces and interests. The threat is under constant assessment and prudent measures are in place to ensure the safety of our ships and personnel, wherever they may be.

Kursk

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date military assistance was first (a) offered to, (b) accepted and (c) provided to Russia in respect of the Kursk disaster; and what the nature has been of the assistance provided since that date. [137925]

Mr. Hoon: The Ministry of Defence offered the assistance of the UK Submarine Search and Rescue Service (UKSSRS) to the Russian rescue effort in a letter to the Russian Defence Minister, which was delivered by the British Embassy Moscow on 14 August. With time being of the essence, we approved the forward deployment of the UKSSRS to Norway on 15 August. The Russian Ministry of Defence accepted our offer, through our Naval Attaché in Moscow, on 16 August. On 21 August, Russian authorities confirmed that all on board the Kursk had died. Our further assistance was not therefore required and the UKSSRS was withdrawn. The Russians have made no further official requests to the UK for assistance in connection with the Kursk.

HMS Fearless

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his assessment is of (a) the damage to and (b) the period needed for repairs to HMS Fearless. [137910]

Mr. Spellar: HMS Fearless sustained fire damage to her After Machinery Space. The full extent of the damage will not be known until detailed surveys, which are currently under way, have been completed.

It is planned that repairs will be undertaken during a programmed maintenance period at Fleet Support Ltd., Portsmouth, commencing in December. However, until the full extent of the damage is assessed, the period needed to complete the repairs cannot be given.

Unmanned Aerial Vehicles (Balkans)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about British unmanned aerial vehicles lost in the Balkans theatre since March 1998. [137906]

Mr. Spellar: The Phoenix Unmanned Aerial Vehicle (UAV) was first deployed to the Balkans theatre between June-August 1999. No UK UAVs were deployed before this date. At the request of KFOR Headquarters, the system was deployed again in May 2000 and remained in-theatre until 1 November 2000. Since June 1999, some 270 missions have been flown in-theatre. In total there have been 29 occasions where either the airframe and/or the sensor payload has been lost or written off due to damage incurred. Reasons for losses include hostile action, landing damage and equipment failure. The attrition rate, including losses to hostile action, is not inconsistent with that expected during peacetime usage. The costs associated with the losses need to be set against the risks of using alternative means of surveillance and reconnaissance such as manned aircraft or personnel on the ground. Operational reports continue to indicate that Phoenix is both reliable and highly effective as a general reconnaissance and surveillance system with the capability to conduct safe surveillance over areas which might otherwise be inaccessible.

European Security and Defence Identity

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on the proposal under the European Security and Defence Identity on the mechanism for consultation before deployment of British troops. [137837]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 10 November 2000]: The European Council at Helsinki decided that all member states would be entitled to participate fully, and on an equal footing, in all decisions and deliberations of the Council and Council bodies on EU-led crisis management operations. The Council also decided that commitment of national assets by member states to such operations will be based on their sovereign decision.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the sites of former (a) chemical weapons factories and (b) chemical weapons stores in the United Kingdom. [137832]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 10 November 2000]: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Pensions (Armed Forces)

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the level of pensions payable to former members of the armed services who retired in the 1970s. [136117]

Mr. Spellar: Former members of the armed services who retired during the mid 1970s were affected by policies under which increases in pay were limited, but pensions in payment continued to be fully protected against price inflation. People who retired when price inflation was running at a higher rate than pay increases could therefore receive lower pensions than those retiring before or after them.

These policies affected all those employed in the public service. The Government have no plans retrospectively to change the pensions of those who retired during this period. The pensions of all such individuals have, like those of other public servants, been fully protected against inflation since their retirement.

Royal Navy

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) reviews and (b) studies his Department is conducting on the operational capability of the Royal Navy; and if he will make a statement. [138241]

Mr. Spellar: The operational capability of the Royal Navy is kept under continual review. This allows the RN to take into consideration changing circumstances. In addition, at any one time, it is likely that a number of more formal reviews or studies with a wider remit will be taking place, any one of which may impact on the area of operational capability. It is the nature of operational issues that much of this work is classified.

Missile Barge (Brixham)

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the status is of the missile test firing barge at Brixham; and how much has been spent in berthing fees in each of the past three years. [138242]

Mr. Spellar: The missile test barge Longbow, previously used for Sea Wolf trials, has been moored at Brixham pending its conversion for use in missile firing trials for the Principal Anti Air Missile System (PAAMS) Programme. Berthing fees paid during 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 were £23,824, £24,734 and £25,834 respectively. It has been more cost-effective to retain Longbow than arrange for its disposal and then have to purchase anew for the PAAMS Programme. The barge is now expected to be handed over to the PAAMS contractor in 2002.

Sea Harriers

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Sea Harrier aircraft are operationally available. [138225]

Mr. Spellar: The requirement for Sea Harrier operational aircraft is 24, of which 14 are in front-line squadrons. As of 9 November 2000, all 24 aircraft were available at the required readiness.

Foreign Military Equipment

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much he has spent in the last year on the hire and use of foreign military equipment. [138239]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

RAF Pilots

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF pilots have indicated that they wish to leave the service in each of the past 12 months. [138226]

Mr. Spellar: The number of RAF pilots who have indicated that they wish to leave the Service in each month during the 12 month period from October 1999 are shown in the table.

Year	Number of RAF pilots
October 1999	8
November 1999	3
December 1999	3
January 2000	6
February 2000	8
March 2000	8
April 2000	4
May 2000	9
June 2000	8
July 2000	3
August 2000	3
September 2000	4

Falklands Patrols

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Royal Navy ships are on patrol in Falkland Islands waters. [138238]

Mr. Spellar: HMS Dumbarton Castle and Grey Rover are currently on patrol in Falkland Islands waters. The Type 23 Frigate HMS Iron Duke will arrive in the area later this month.

Harrier Pilots

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Fleet Air Arm Harrier pilots are combat ready. [138224]

Mr. Spellar: As of 9 November 2000, there were 18 combat ready Fleet Air Arm Harrier pilots in front-line squadrons. A further 15 pilots were at their planned lower states of readiness.

HM Forces Overseas

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number and location of HM forces overseas; and if he will make a statement. [138095]

Mr. Spellar: The following table shows the number of UK Regular Forces and Gurkhas overseas at 1 October 2000.

	UK Regular Forces
Region	Naval Service	Army	Royal Air Force	Gurkhas	Total
Continental Europe	826	24,798	3,595	0	29,219
of which Germany	3	17,135	2,031	0	19,169
Gibraltar	365	87	115	0	567
Cyprus	7	2,543	1,137	0	3,687

Far East	681	213	24	1,197	2,115
Canada	3	3,401	143	0	3,547
United States of America	76	291	136	0	503
Elsewhere[1]	2,958	1,779	780	1	5,518
All overseas	4,965	33,332	6,633	1,198	46,128

[1] All defence attachés and their staffs are included under "Elsewhere" and not identified within specific areas

These figures exclude Full Time Reserve Service personnel and reservists mobilised for service in the former Yugoslavia.

Japanese POWs

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will (1) make it his policy to pay a gratuity to British ex-service survivors of former Japanese prisoner of war camps; [136188]

(2) estimate the cost of paying a one-off £10,000 gratuity to all surviving former Japanese prisoners of war and their widows. [136189]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to my statement in the House on 7 November 2000, Official Report, columns 159–70.

Anti-tank Landmines

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the stocks of anti-tank landmines which are being refurbished. [137746]

Mr. Spellar: Part of the anti-tank stockpile is being refurbished to rectify an identified fault. The refurbishment programme began in March 2000 and is scheduled to be completed by October 2001.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef Imports

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the (a) quantity, (b) category and (c) age of beef imported into the UK from France in the last 12 month period for which figures are available. [134513]

Ms Quin: The table shows (a) the quantity and (b) the category of beef imported from France for the 12 month period from August 1999 to July 2000, as recorded by the Overseas Trade Statistics. These statistics do not identify the age of the animal from which the beef was derived, but the sale for human consumption of any meat from animals aged over 30 months at slaughter is prohibited by the Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) (No. 2) Regulations 1996. The country from which these imports originated is not recorded in the Overseas Trade Statistics; therefore not necessarily all beef shown as being imported from France will be of French origin.

Imports of beef from France August 1999-July 2000

Description of beef	Tonnes
Bone-in, fresh or chilled	146
Boneless, fresh or chilled	504
Bone-in, frozen	543
Boneless, frozen	1,497
Offal, fresh, chilled or frozen	377
Corned beef	2,491
Other meat and offal preparations	90
Total	5,647

Note:

The data are provisional and subject to amendment

School Milk

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to raise the level of take-up of milk in schools. [134400]

Ms Quin: While the decision whether to offer subsidised school milk is essentially for the schools themselves or for the LEA, we have had and continue to have contact with local authorities and others interested in the use of the scheme. One barrier to take-up has been the perception that the scheme administration is particularly complicated. We are working with the Commission in its current review of administration to see whether there are ways this can be simplified for schools.

Farm Bankruptcies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many bankruptcies of farmers there were in each year from 1990 to 1999; and what percentage this represented of the total number of farmers in England. [136592]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 November 2000]: Data on bankruptcies are available only for England and Wales combined, and are given in the table. Estimates of the number of farmers in England and Wales are not directly available. Instead, bankruptcies have been expressed as a proportion of the number of registered agricultural holdings.

Number of bankruptcies[1] in the agricultural and horticultural sector: England and Wales 1990–99

Year	Bankruptcies of self-employed individuals	Company insolvencies[2]	Total	Bankruptcies as a percentage of number of holdings[3]
1990	198	111	309	0.2
1991	266	135	401	0.2
1992	313	191	504	0.3
1993	277	157	434	0.2
1994	231	166	397	0.2
1995	218	99	317	0.2
1996	168	89	257	0.1
1997	155	51	206	0.1

Fertilisers

Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received about the effect of import tariffs on ammonium nitrate upon the price of fertilisers for agriculture; and if he will make a statement. [136963]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 November 2000]: I have received representations from the Fertiliser Manufacturers Association and the National Farmers' Union on this matter. We have registered concern with the Commission at the possibility that it may seek to impose anti-dumping measures on a range of fertiliser products and have called for an assessment of the wider state of competition in the fertilisers market.

Cattle Passports

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the unit cost is of each passport issued by the British Cattle Movement Service. [136844]

Ms Quin: The unit cost of each passport issued by the British Cattle Movement Service is £7.73.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many replacement passports have been issued by the British Cattle Movement Service; and what income has been received from charges for these replacements, since the establishment of the service. [136843]

Ms Quin: The British Cattle Movement Service has re-issued 380,779 passports since it was established on 28 September 1998. 4,133 have been charged for, generating an income of £206,650. BCMS does not charge for replacement passports that are reported as lost in the post within one calendar month of being issued.

Eggs

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the extent of the United Kingdom's self-sufficiency in egg production. [137581]

Ms Quin: In 1999 the United Kingdom produced 94 per cent. of its egg market requirements.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many registered egg producers have traded in each of the past 10 years. [137579]

Ms Quin: Under EC egg marketing legislation egg producers are required to register their premises only if they intend to use any of the Special Marketing Terms such as Free Range or Barn. Producers of eggs from cage systems are not included in the table.

Financial year	Number of premises
1992	1,168
1993	1,162
1994	1,046
1995	1,057
1996	1,027
1997	1,055
1998	1,081
1999	1,161
2000	1,252

In 1998, MAFF data show over 25,000 holdings with laying hens.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what volume of eggs was imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years. [137582]

Ms Quin: The quantity of eggs imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years is as follows:

Million dozen

Year	Number of eggs imported
1990	73
1991	50
1992	41
1993	49
1994	67
1995	66
1996	72
1997	70

Data include shell egg equivalent of whole (dried, frozen and liquid) egg, egg yolk, and albumen.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the trend in ex-farm prices for fresh eggs over the past 10 years. [137580]

Ms Quin: The average ex-farm price for all egg types for each of the last 10 years is as follows:

Pence per dozen

Year	All egg type average
1990	42.6
1991	36.3
1992	36.8
1993	41.9
1994	42.4
1996	45.8
1997	39.6
1998	36.3

Wheat

Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average (a) market price and (b) cost of production, per tonne of wheat in the last 12 months. [136965]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 November 2000]: The average farm-gate price of bread-making wheat in the UK during the last 12 months was £82.39 per tonne. The average price of feed wheat was £68.86 per tonne. Current prices are, however, lower than this. In addition to receipts from the sale of the crop, most producers received revenues from area payments and straw sales.

Estimates of production costs are published in "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom". The latest published information relates to the 1998–99 marketing year. Estimates for the 1999–2000 marketing year will be published in the next edition in March 2001. The publication does not include information on fixed costs, because of the difficulty of allocating these items between commodities.

BSE

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the results of research involving embryos from BSE-affected cows fertilised by BSE bulls, implanted into heifers imported from New Zealand. [137575]

Ms Quin: Preliminary results from this research project have already been published[1]. All of the post mortem results obtained to date for implanted heifers and their offspring have been negative for BSE. The experiment is still on-going and will continue until June 2001 when the offspring will have reached seven years of age. Full results will be published once the analysis of the data is complete.

[1]Wrathall, AE(2000): Livestock Production Science 62.287–316

Swine Fever

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation to provide for a levy from pig farmers as part of a package of compensation for swine fever. [138098]

Ms Quin: The industry is about to begin consultations on a levy-based Development Scheme that will be used to top up Government payments under the Pig Welfare (Disposal) Scheme. On completion of that consultation exercise, including addressing any objections, Ministers will be asked to decide whether to put a scheme before Parliament for approval. I cannot anticipate the outcome of these procedures, but in general terms we support efforts by the livestock industry to protect itself from the consequences of outbreaks of exotic animal diseases.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many rural communities have been provided with Government funds for CCTV since 1997; and how many of such communities have populations of (a) less than 5,000 and (b) less than 2,000. [136757]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 6 November 2000]: I have been asked to reply.

Since 1997, under the Crime Reduction Programme, the Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) Initiative and the final round of the CCTV Challenge Competition, this Government have awarded nearly £1.7 million to 23 CCTV schemes serving rural communities. These include coverage in small towns and villages and mobile units that can be deployed across wider rural areas. Information is not available as to the sizes of the populations covered.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137434]

Mr. Mandelson: The Government fully support the aims of the International Year of Volunteers and in April of this year I volunteered for a day at Hartlepool hospice.

Mr. Sam Marshall

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the death of Mr. Sam Marshall in Lurgan; and when he expects an inquest to be held into his death. [134882]

Mr. Ingram: This matter was raised by the Irish Government through the British Irish Secretariat. The listing of any inquest is a matter for the Coroner. In respect of the death of Mr. Marshall I understand that consideration is presently being given to the arrangements for a pre-inquest hearing.

Prisoner Releases

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners released following the Good Friday Agreement are no longer resident at a permanent address which is known to the authorities. [138189]

Mr. Ingram: The only licence conditions imposed on a prisoner given early release is that they do not become a supporter of a specified organisation, do not become concerned in the commission, preparation, or instigation of acts of terrorism connected with the affairs of Northern Ireland; and, in the case of a life sentence prisoner, do not become a danger to the public. There is no requirement to provide the authorities with a permanent address. Irrespective of residence, arrangements are in place to ensure that the Secretary of State is notified when an individual breaches the terms of his licence.

Sentence Review Applications

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fugitives from justice who have previously been convicted of terrorist-related offences have made an application to the Sentences Review Commission; and if he will list their names. [138101]

Mr. Ingram: To date, no fugitives from justice who have previously been convicted of terrorist-related offences have made an application to the Sentence Review Commissioners.

Dalai Lama (Belfast Visit)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) uniformed and (b) plain clothes RUC officers were present during the visit of the Dalai Lama to the Springfield road, Belfast. [136036]

Mr. Ingram: During the visit of the Dalai Lama to the Springfield road, Belfast, on Thursday 19 October 2000, 119 uniformed police officers and 12 plain clothes officers were present.

Bomb Scares

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many bomb scares have there been in town centres in each police division in Northern Ireland in each week since 1 April; and, of these, how many were (a) Republican-inspired and (b) Loyalist-inspired. [136040]

Mr. Ingram: The table shows the number of hoax bombing incidents recorded in Northern Ireland during the period 1 April to 27 October 2000. These are incidents where an Army Technical Officer (ATO) was in attendance. It is not possible to define a town centre and so the table gives the location of each recorded incident. It is also not possible to give attributions for hoax bombings.

Police Force

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what assessment he has made of trends in Catholic applications to the police force in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement; [137328]

(2) what (a) proportion and (b) number of applicants to the RUC/Northern Ireland police force were (i) Catholic, (ii) Protestant and (iii) from other communities from 1995 to date; and if he will make a statement. [137503]

Mr. Ingram: The following table provides the information requested, by recruitment competition from 1995. Under the terms of section 31 of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 (now Article 55 of the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998) this matter is continuously under review and requires the Royal Ulster Constabulary to identify under-representation and establish appropriate affirmative action to address any imbalances. The Royal Ulster Constabulary fully recognises the benefits and the need to be more representative of the communities it serves and its goal is to reflect the composition of those communities. The Government are committed to taking all appropriate steps as are necessary, in line with the recommendations contained in the Report of the Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland, to bring about an increase in full cross-community representation within the police service.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Payroll Administration

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the costs of payroll administration in his Department and associated agencies and non-departmental bodies in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [135993]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 1 November 2000]: The estimated payroll administration costs for DETR and its agencies for 2000–01 is £2.2 million.

Payroll administration of non-departmental public bodies is decentralised so the above information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

London Underground

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when contracts for the Public-Private Partnership for London Underground will be signed; and if he will make a statement. [137038]

Mr. Hill: As we have made clear in the past, we have not given specific deadlines. We have learned the lessons of the rail privatisation debacle when best value was compromised by working to a politically driven timetable. The position on the PPP is that bids have been received for the sub-surface lines contract, and best and final offers have been invited for the two deep tube contracts. Contracts will be signed when the bids have been evaluated and negotiations are complete, subject to the bids representing best value.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the cost to date of (a) legal and (b) financial consultancy fees incurred in relation to the Public-Private Partnership for London Underground. [137037]

Mr. Hill: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 18 May 2000, Official Report, column 252W. I shall shortly be reporting London Transport's expenditure on external consultants for work on the PPP and restructuring London Underground up to the end of the first half of the current financial year, and a forecast of the expected final outturn.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the findings of the Independent Review of the Public-Private Partnership carried out on behalf of the Mayor of London and the Greater London Authority by Mr. Will Hutton; and if he will make a statement. [137009]

Mr. Hill: The review contains a wide-ranging discussion of issues relating to London Underground funding, and has a great deal that is positive to say about the PPP. It says,

"The PPP will provide a framework in which higher investment can be insulated from Treasury cuts and planned over a 30-year period."

It goes on to say that,

"The contract outlines we have inspected offer a workable framework for improved performance for most aspects of the Underground," and that the "rewards and penalties together should incentivise investment, cost control and good management."

I particularly noted its statement that

"The Review does not subscribe to the argument that the PPP structure is inherently unsafe and it recognises the special effort made by Government in ensuring that safety is managed centrally and rests ultimately in public sector hands."

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reports he has received on the quality of service on the Circle Line in the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [137046]

Mr. Hill: The Secretary of State has received no specific reports in the past 12 months on the quality of service of the Circle Line. However we do monitor the service across the whole network and I meet regularly with London Underground senior management.

Crematoriums (Emissions)

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has (a) undertaken and (b) commissioned into emissions from crematoriums; and what plans he has to conduct further research. [137039]

Mr. Meacher: Emissions from crematoriums are regulated under the air pollution control system established by Part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. As such, emissions must be controlled in accordance with the Best Available Techniques Not Entailing Excessive Cost. Guidance on BATNEEC for crematoriums was published in 1991 and revised in 1995. A second review of the guidance by the Environment Agency's Local Authority Unit is currently in progress and the revised guidance will also be applicable when crematoriums become regulated under the Pollution Prevention and Control Act 1999.

My Department, on behalf of Government and the devolved Administrations, has established a programme of monitoring levels of airborne lead and heavy metals (cadmium, arsenic, nickel and mercury) in the UK. This includes measurement in the vicinity of the Sutton Coldfield crematorium. Weekly measurements started in October 1999, and interim results will be posted on the internet shortly (www.aeat.co.uk/netcen/airqual/). A fuller report of the work will be published on the internet, at the same internet address, early next year.

In 1997 my Department commissioned Entec UK Ltd. to carry out tests to investigate the effectiveness of selenium ampoules as a means of abating mercury emissions from crematoria.

My Department has commissioned a report on sources, sinks and levels of atmospheric mercury from DERA. The report will include a review of knowledge of UK emissions of mercury into the atmosphere, details of all the available sources of data on concentrations of mercury in the atmosphere, and a review of the current state of knowledge on the behaviour of mercury in the environment.

The DERA report is expected shortly from the research report pages of the National Air Quality Information Archive on http://www.aeat.co.uk/netcen/airqual/. In the light of that and the advice of the Environment Agency's Local Authority Unit, we will consider commissioning further work on whether any action needs to be taken to reduce mercury emissions from crematoriums and what options are available and in line with BATNEEC.

The most recent air emissions inventory for mercury can be found in the National Air Quality Information Archive at the web address given above.

You may also like to be aware that the Health and Safety Laboratory has carried out mercury analysis on a small number of urine and dust samples collected in crematoriums, and levels have been found to be low.

Climate Change

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what strategic measures he is taking to allow for environmental changes induced by climate change. [137180]

Mr. Meacher: We published our first assessment of the impacts of climate change in 1990, and our second in 1995. In 1997, my Department established the UK Climate Impacts Programme to help organisations assess their vulnerability to climate change and assist them in planning responses to adapt to it. In addition actions have already been taken by Government to build adaptation into its own policies, in sectors such as flood defence, land use planning and water resources.

The Government's forthcoming Climate Change Programme, which presents a strategy for delivering our commitments to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases, also considers how the UK might adapt to what is now unavoidable and continues the debate on priorities for adaptation.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with other Governments concerning action to reduce the harmful effects of climatic change and global warming, in advance of the Hague summit in November; and if he will make a statement. [138069]

Mr. Meacher: The Government have continued to play a leading role in the international response to climate change. The Conference of the Parties in The Hague later this month will be a crucial step towards our goal of effective international action to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. In recent months, the Deputy Prime Minister has discussed climate change with Governments from 14 countries, including China, India, Nigeria, Saudi Arabia, Mexico, Algeria, Malaysia and Jamaica, as well as with the Prime Minister of Japan and Vice-President Al Gore. On 7 November, the Deputy Prime Minister and I attended the Special EU Environment Council on climate change. I discuss climate change regularly with my EU colleagues, and take the opportunity of raising it whenever I meet Environment Ministers from around the world. In June and October I also attended preparatory meetings organised by the President of the forthcoming negotiations, Minister Jan Pronk of the Netherlands, in Warsaw and Muiden. These informal consultations were attended by around 30–40 Ministers from key countries in the climate negotiations. Discussions focused on the central issues in the negotiations and a range of possible options for resolving them, in advance of the key political choices which will have to be taken at The Hague summit.

GM Crops

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from Leicestershire local authorities about farm scale evaluations of GM crops; and if he will make a statement. [137070]

Mr. Meacher: Officials from my Department attended a meeting in October, at the invitation of Woodhouse parish council, to explain the nature of the farm scale evaluation of GM oil seed rape being conducted in their parish. The borough of Charnwood, which includes Woodhouse, has also invited an official to attend a future meeting on GM crops.

Oil Industry

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action his Department (a) has taken and (b) intends to take to address the environmental impact of using oil as an energy source. [137220]

Mr. Meacher: The Government are taking action to tackle climate change by reducing emissions of greenhouse gases, including those from the use of oil and other fossil fuels as an energy source. The climate change programme, which will be published shortly, will outline the scale of the challenge facing the UK and make clear that emission reductions of 60–70 per cent. or more are likely to be needed globally in order to avoid dangerous climate change. The programme will set out the policies and measures that will begin to move the UK towards a low carbon economy. And it will detail how the Government intend to help and assist the development of new, sustainable and renewable technologies.

One area where oil is still used as a primary energy source is in the transport sector. The Government are taking forward a range of policies that will improve the fuel efficiency and emissions performance of vehicles, encourage people to buy smaller, cleaner and more fuel-efficient cars, and stimulate the development and use of alternative fuels and technologies. The Government are also addressing the environmental impact of traffic growth through the Ten Year Plan for transport and planning policies.

The use of oil as an energy source can also have serious air quality impacts. The Government and the devolved Administrations published the Air Quality Strategy for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland in January 2000. This sets out a programme of action that will be taken at international, national and local levels to tackle air pollution from all sources. In the transport sector, the fuels that are used today are significantly cleaner than those used only a few years ago. This is largely the result of progressively tighter European fuel quality standards, but is also due in part to our incentivisation of the use of cleaner fuels (such as ultra-low-sulphur petrol and diesel) across the UK through favourable duty rates. This has led to significant reductions in emissions of the most harmful air pollutants. We will continue to play an active role in discussions at a European Union level on the possible further tightening of vehicle and fuel standards.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the adequacy of the supply of appropriately trained and qualified technical and inspection staff at the Health and Safety Executive; and if he will make a statement. [137370]

Mr. Meacher: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) regularly and systematically recruits a range of inspection and technical staff. HSE is satisfied with the adequacy of supply for the majority of the posts it seeks to fill. There have been problems filling some very specialist posts where the pool of likely candidates is small, eg Medical Inspectors (Doctors). HSE reviews the outcome of each recruitment exercise and takes whatever steps are necessary to meet its overall professional requirements.

Construction Directorate (Standards)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the standards laid down by the Construction Directorate, attainment of which is necessary for registration on the Constructionline UK Register of Qualified Construction Services. [137318]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 8 November 2000]: Applicants to Constructionline must have three satisfactory technical references for each work category that they are applying to be registered under. They are also assessed for their financial strength, by means of their accounts or other financial documentation. This information is also used to calculate a recommended maximum contract size, or notation value. All applicants must have a valid tax certificate.

Constructionline has also been piloting in certain sectors a system of devolved technical assessment which is intended to raise the system's technical standards. This procedure is due to be opened up to the whole of Constructionline shortly.

Neighbourhood Revenue Fund

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the financial settlement for each London local authority would have been if the 1998 Index of Local Deprivation had been used as the key determinator of the allocation of resources under the Neighbourhood Revenue Fund. [137513]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The proposed allocations for the Neighbourhood Renewal Fund cannot be calculated using the old 1998 Index of Local Deprivation in exactly the same way that they have been determined using the new Indices. The new Indices of Deprivation are very different from the old Index. The new Indices are based on ward level information whereas the old Index relied heavily on district level information and did not adequately capture pockets of deprivation. It would not therefore be appropriate to use the same method to calculate the NRF allocations if only the old Index was available.

Council Tax Regulations

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what mechanisms his Department is using to monitor the changes to council tax regulations; and when he will publish the results of his review of the changes; [137496]

(2) when he expects to publish the findings of his Department's review of changes to council tax regulations. [137512]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We carried out a review of the council tax in preparation for our 1998 White Paper "Modern Local Government: In Touch with the People". In this we said that the council tax is working well as a local tax and that we have no plans to make major changes to the council tax during the course of this Parliament.

We also said that we would keep the operation of the council tax under review and have done this through liaison with key players such as local authorities, the Local Government Association and other interested parties. As a result we have made a number of minor changes to the council tax since the White Paper. The main ones extended relief under the reduction for disabilities scheme to occupiers of band A dwellings; exempted households comprising students and people with a severe mental impairment; restricted the exemption for empty dwellings in need of major repair works to 12 months; and introduced owner liability in respect of certain dwellings occupied by asylum seekers.

We also invited views on certain aspects of the council tax in the Green Paper "Modernising Local Government Finance", which we published in September. The deadline for responses is 8 December.

Byker Heat Station

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Environment Agency has completed its investigations into the spreading of toxic ash from the Byker Heat station. [137603]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency has completed its investigation into the production and disposal of ash from Byker Combined Heat and Power Plant in Newcastle. A case file has been prepared for submission to the Agency's legal department. The file will be considered in accordance with the Agency's Scheme of Delegation and a decision on enforcement action is expected at the beginning of December.

Merseyside Objective 1 Programme

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to minimise delays in the Merseyside Objective 1 programme as a result of rulings made by the Competition Directorate in the European Commission. [137523]

Ms Beverley Hughes: There is no delay in implementing the Merseyside Objective One programme. It is proceeding well in line with the timetable agreed with the European Commission and the first projects to receive funding will be announced in the next couple of weeks.

Some of the projects intended to deliver part of the programme include substantial physical works involving identified private sector developers. Such projects must adhere to the EC's rules on state aid.

Proposals for securing approval of projects of this kind have been put to the European Commission. We are in constructive dialogue with the EC on this issue and we expect a positive response to our proposals shortly.

Ultrasonic Technology

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the efficacy of ultrasonic technology in detecting gauge corner cracking defects; and if he will make a statement. [137486]

Mr. Hill: The Health and Safety Executive's (HSE's) Railway Inspectorate has reviewed the relevant ultrasonic rail testing procedures, as described in Railtrack Line Specification RT/CE/S/055 Issue 1A, February 1998. These procedures are highly detailed and appear to be robust. Nevertheless, HSE intends to commission an independent third party review of these procedures as a matter of urgency.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of the funding provided to Railtrack by the Government, over what timescale, will be allocated to the further development and introduction of alternatives to ultrasound; and if he will make a statement. [137411]

Mr. Hill: Since privatisation, no public money has been paid direct to Railtrack. I understand that Railtrack is considering the procurement of a scoping study to evaluate the suitability for rail inspection of all known forms of non-destructive testing (NDT). The study is to be undertaken by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. Railtrack will fund development of any NDT technique with the potential to improve current techniques for testing rails.

Mineral Extraction (Bristol Channel)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the report, commissioned by his Department and the Welsh Office, concerning extraction of mineral aggregates from the Bristol Channel. [137510]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The research report entitled "Bristol Channel Marine Aggregates: Resources and Constraints", commissioned by my Department and the National Assembly for Wales, was published by Posford Duvivier and ABP Research and Consultancy in October 2000. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Biggin Hill Airport

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take (a) environmental, (b) Green Belt and (c) conservation considerations into account in reaching his decision over Bromley council's request to him to bring into the normal planning regulations the application by Biggin Hill Airport to build a hangar under the permitted use rules. [137337]

Ms Beverley Hughes: All relevant considerations will be taken fully into account in considering whether to approve the proposed direction.

Overhead Transmission Lines

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral statement of 31 October 2000, Official Report, columns 607–25, on severe weather disruption, when he will write to the hon. Member for the Vale of York on the impact of overhead transmission lines on global warming; and if he will make a statement. [137366]

Mr. Prescott: There is no significant connection between global warming and electricity power lines. Some very minor effects on atmospheric particles have however been noted and I am writing to the hon. Member with further information.

NDPBs (Scotland)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the non-departmental public bodies responsible to him which have duties relating to Scotland, indicating their budget and staffing in Scotland, the number of Scottish board members and their emoluments. [137487]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The following executive NDPBs sponsored by my Department have duties relating to Scotland: the Joint Nature Conservation Committee and the Northern Lighthouse Board.

The remaining information is not all held centrally in the form requested, but information on expenditure, staffing, board members and levels of remuneration is published annually in the Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies". Copies of "Public Bodies 1999" have been placed in the library of the House and "Public Bodies 2000" is due to be published next month. Information on board membership and remuneration can also be downloaded from the Cabinet Office's Public Appointments Directory website, "www.cabinet-office.gov.uk".

Trichloroethylene

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his policy is on listing Trichloroethylene as a Category II carcinogen under the Chemicals (Hazard Information and Packaging for Supply) Regulations 1994. [137392]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 9 November 2000]: Trichloroethylene is listed as a Category 3 carcinogen in the Chemicals (Hazard Information and Packaging for Supply) Regulations 1994. These regulations implement an EC single market directive, and negotiations are in progress which could result in a change to the classification from 3 to 2. The United Kingdom's final position on the full set of proposals is not yet settled.

Number Plates

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to lay regulations bringing in the new style of number plate for motor vehicles; and what the reason is for the delay in laying the regulations. [137532]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 9 November 2000]: It is anticipated that new number plate regulations will be laid before Parliament early in the new year. The delay in laying these regulations has arisen as a result of the need to revise the draft regulations following public consultation in August 1999 and January this year. In accordance with EC Directive 98/34/EC, as amended by Directive 98/48/EC, we have submitted the revised regulations to the European Commission. The regulations may be made after the end of the three-month consultation period with the Commission, which expires on 22 January 2001.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reason details of the font to be used on the new style of number plates for motor vehicles announced in March have not been released to manufacturers of number plates. [137533]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 9 November 2000]: Details of the font to be used on the new style number plates, to be introduced from the revised date of 1 September 2001, were included in the Department's original consultation letter issued on 5 August 1999. This was sent to over 180 organisations and was placed on the Department's website. Copies have also been available from the Department on request.

Mobile Phone Masts

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend the planning law relating to mobile phone masts. [138024]

Ms Beverley Hughes: A consultation exercise seeking views on possible changes to the planning laws relating to mobile phone masts and associated guidance ended on 31 October 2000. The Department is currently analysing the responses. We shall announce any changes as soon as practicable.

Drainage

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to encourage the use of sustainable urban drainage systems in new housing developments. [138002]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Sustainable drainage systems (SUDS), which deal with rainwater as near its source as possible, are recognised as assisting in the control of both the quantity and quality of run-off from developed areas, as well as contributing to amenity, biodiversity and good design. My Department is actively encouraging the development of sustainable drainage systems for housing and other developments in a number of ways. Indeed, the Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin), gave the keynote message at a conference on SUDs earlier this month.

We consulted earlier this year on new Planning Policy Guidance Note (PPG) 25 "Development and flood risk", which refers to the need for local planning authorities to consider the run-off implications of proposed development and encourage more sustainable drainage systems. This guidance is likely to be confirmed and strengthened when the final version of PPG 25 is issued shortly.

We are currently also revising PPG 23 "Planning and pollution control". The new version will recognise the potential contribution of SUDS and we hope to consult on a draft next year.

We are currently consulting on the Review of Part H of the Building Regulations. This includes a recommendation that infiltration drainage be provided, in most situations, to absorb rainwater from buildings within the site.

The Highways Agency, in consultation with the devolved Administrations is developing advice for inclusion in the "Design Manual for Roads and Bridges" on "Vegetative Treatment Systems for Highway Runoff". This is expected to be published next year.

We and other interested parties, including the water industry and house-builders, have also supported research projects in this area, leading to the production of design manuals and a forthcoming best practice manual. We will continue to support research necessary to assist in overcoming any perceived barriers to the implementation of SUDS on a more widespread basis.

Area Cost Adjustment

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what changes he plans to make to the calculation of the area cost adjustment for local authorities in the south-east; and if he will make a statement. [138005]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Ministers have not yet taken a decision on whether to update the area cost adjustment to reflect the data from the 1999 New Earnings Survey. An announcement will be made in due course.

Farnborough Airfield

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about the removal of trees on hills near Farnborough Airfield. [137970]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 10 November 2000]: My right hon. Friend received some 125 representations that he should call in for his own determination the planning application for the development of Farnborough Airfield for civil aviation. Of these 25 specifically mentioned the removal of trees and/or the re-profiling of Miles Hill and Eelmoor Hill West, while the other 80 referred more generally to the environmental impact of the planning application. We gave careful consideration to the issues raised by the application but concluded that it did not raise issues which would justify my right hon. Friend's intervention.

Flood Plains

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice he gives to local authorities on the desirability of building new houses on flood plains. [138058]

Ms Beverley Hughes: In addition to the general guidance at present in Circular 30/92, which is to be updated in PPG25, guidance on housing is given in PPG3 "Housing", published in March 2000. This requires local authorities to assess the suitability of land for housing against a range of physical and environmental constraints, including flood risk, and the fact that such risks may increase as a result of climate change.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he gives to local authorities considering a planning application to build on flood plains. [138057]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Guidance is at present given in DOE Circular 30/92, "Development and Flood Risk". This requires local planning authorities to take flood risk considerations into account in determining planning applications. They should also take into account the results of surveys of flood defence issues prepared by the Environment Agency under section 105 of the Water Resources Act 1991, and the views of the Environment Agency on individual applications. This guidance is currently being revised and strengthened in Planning Policy Guidance Note 25. A consultation draft was published in April 2000 and the final text is expected to be published in December.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a map showing the flood plain of the Ouseburn/Jesmond Dene, Newcastle upon Tyne, and the location and date of (a) flooding of property and (b) storm sewer overflows in the last 10 years. [138022]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Indicative flood plain maps prepared by the Environment Agency were distributed to all local authorities in 1999. These are currently being revised and the Agency intend to place them on their website in December in a form that will enable searches by postcode. While the Environment Agency could supply the current flood plain map, my hon. Friend may wish to await publication of the revised maps in December.

My Department does not hold records of flooding of property and storm sewer overflows. Operational flood matters are for the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Environment Agency and other drainage authorities. I would expect the information to be available from one or more of the local authorities, the Environment Agency and the sewerage undertaker for the area.

Workplace Accidents (Children)

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many children were (a) involved and (b) killed in workplace accidents in each of the past 20 years. [137830]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 10 November 2000]: The table shows the number of fatal and non-fatal injuries to children in workplace accidents reported to HSE and local authorities for the period 1986–87 to 1999–2000. The figures include both children at work and those not at work, but whose injuries arise out of or in connection with work activities. Data prior to 1986–87 are not available from HSE's databases.

Injuries to children[1] reported to HSE[2] and local authorities 1986–87 to 1999–2000

[1] Children are defined as individuals aged one year and up to and including 15 years of age. A search criterion of 0 years produces records where age is not known, as well as children under the age of one. These data cannot be dissagregated.

[2] Injuries reported under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations (RIDDOR) 1985 (for the years 1986–87 to 1995–96) and RIDDOR 1995 (for the years 1996–97 to 1999–2000). Data reported to HSE's Field Operations Directorate, Nuclear Safety Division, Hazardous Installations Directorate from 1999–2000 (Chemical and Hazardous Installations Division 1996–97 to 1998–99) and local authorities. Data reported to HSE's Railway Inspectorate can be searched only by passenger or employee and therefore have not been included.

Notes:
1. Non-fatal includes major and over three day injuries as defined by RIDDOR 1995.
2. Data from 1 April to 31 March.
3. Injury figures from 1996–97 cannot be directly compared to previous years' figures due to the introduction of RIDDOR 1995.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions there were involving (a) workplace accidents and (b) workplace deaths involving children in each of the past 20 years. [137831]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 10 November 2000]: The table shows the number of prosecutions involving (a) workplace accidents to children and (b) workplace deaths involving children for the period 1996–97 to 1999–2000. Data prior to 1996–97 are not readily available.

Energy Efficiency

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made by Government Departments towards the target of improving energy efficiency by 20 per cent. in the nine years to 31 March. [138406]

Mr. Meacher: By 31 March 1999, energy efficiency in Government Departments had improved by just under 19 per cent. since 1990–91, as measured by the Total Cost Indicator.

Full details for each department are given in the tables. The tables give a summary. All tables include some revisions to figures for earlier years revealing slightly lower performance than previously reported. The last figure announced was 18.1 per cent. to March 1998, but clarification of a misunderstanding with the Navy and data revisions by some other departments have reduced that figure to 17.5 per cent. I expect the figures for 1999–2000, which should be available in the new year, to show that the 20 per cent. has been achieved.

Energy management in individual Departments is a matter for those departments and their Green Minister. However, the Government aim to be at the forefront of good practice to improve energy efficiency, and progress is reviewed regularly by Green Ministers under my chairmanship. We have developed new performance indicators which will, for the first time, enable comparisons with independent standards of good practice across the economy, and are now beginning to use these for the larger office buildings on the central Government estate. Once the first year's data have been collected and analysed, we will consider how best to use them in the new campaign which began in April this year.

Results for the former Department of the Environment and Department of Transport have been consolidated for earlier years to allow a continuous series for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. DETR's overall performance in 1998–99 has improved relative to the previous year, which was adversely affected by parallel operation of buildings during merger of the former departments.

[1] Progress is expressed as a percentage relative to the 1990–91 base year value of the performance indicator in question. Positive figures represent improvement. The standard indicator, against which the target to improve energy efficiency by 20 per cent. by 31 March 2000 is measured, is obtained by weather-correcting energy consumption and converting to costs using "standard prices" for fuel (6p/kWh for electricity and 1.25p/kWh for all fossil fuels) then dividing by floor area. Conversion to money both reflects the relative costs of electricity and fossil fuel and their environmental impact, and the use of fixed prices eliminates the effects of tariff changes which distort the comparison of fuel bills.

[2] Although figures have been prepared on a consistent basis, caution should be exercised in comparing the energy use of different departments and agencies because of differences in their estate and the nature of their work. For example, the operational needs of prisons and the QEII Conference Centre mean that they have a pattern of energy use which is different from that of a department which has predominantly office accommodation. Expenditure on energy and investment figures are included for information only. Investment figures relate to clearly identifiable energy efficiency measures undertaken by departments. Energy efficiency is an integral part of all major construction projects, including building refurbishment and plant replacement and the figure "0" for some departments does not necessarily mean there has been no investment, just that the investment was not clearly identifiable.

[3] The average performance figure for the civil estate cannot be derived by simply adding together the individual departmental progress and dividing by the number of departments because this does not allow for the large variations in consumption. The correct figure is obtained by calculating the value of the performance indicator for the year in question and the base year, for the civil estate as a whole, and calculating the reduction relative to the base year.

[4] The energy performance for MAFF's "Main estate" and its "Laboratories" continues to improve through on-going investment in energy schemes, monitoring of energy at local level and taking appropriate action as well as central initiatives including continued staff awareness programmes.

[5] The DETR's figures have been compiled from the former Environment and Transport Departments. The Department now has a greater proportion of air-conditioned buildings than in the base year, because of estate rationalisation, relocation to new HQ buildings and inclusion of some Government Offices for the Regions. Performance in 1997–98 was adversely affected by parallel operation of both old and new buildings while staff moved from one to the other.

[6] HSE was removed from the DfEE estate on the formation of that Department. QEII Conference Centre is reported separately because of its business-led demands. The initial sharp rise in consumption following the 1990–91 base year was directly attributable to increased revenue earning activity, which has continued throughout the reporting period, ["and the more recent decline in consumption reflects the effect of energy conservation measures undertaken at the site".]

[7] Rationalisation of the estate since the base year has led to staff moving from several naturally ventilated buildings to more densely occupied air-conditioned buildings, all equipped extensively with information technology equipment. Staff numbers have increased by over 25 per cent. since 1997–98 which has led to a commensurate increase in energy consumption.

[9] Base year in 1991–92. Data for Natural Resources Institute no longer included following its transfer to the University of Greenwich in 1996.

[10] Base year is 1994–95 by which time energy efficient lighting and other improvements already installed in buildings which are already fully air-conditioned with intensive IT usage.

[11] The Ministry of Defence (MOD) estate is different from the rest of the Government estate, and has been undergoing more radical changes. It is therefore treated in a slightly different way. In common with the civil estate, it has greatly increased its use of information technology.

[12] In civil departments, the effect of estate changes is allowed for by dividing consumption by floor area. In MOD, floor area is sometimes not meaningful (eg in relation to security or runway lighting) and also not often available. Estate changes are allowed for by being explicitly excluded from the calculations, ie the energy consumption of new facilities is removed, and for facilities no longer part of the estate, the consumption for the last full year of operation is added back. In most cases, such changes are small compared to the total and can often approximately cancel each other out.

[14] It is almost impossible to produce any meaningful results to date for MOD's Procurement Executive (PE) since it has suffered major estate gains and losses over the past 10 years and now consists largely of one recently built large office. The standard MOD methodology produces a meaningless "no change" result (since the present estate is almost entirely different from the original). Consequently, we have taken 1997–98 as the base year and applied the civil departments' methodology to this office.

[15] This shows the combined results for the whole of the Government estate based on the data in tables 1, 2 and 3. It is not a simple average of the data, but reflects the proportion of total consumption represented by each part of the estate (see also note 3). Some departments have a different base year, and the individually agreed base year has been used for the purposes of this table, where appropriate.

[16] In some instances the base year is not 1990–91, but for the purpose of this table the agreed base year has been used in the calculation.

Fuel Poverty (Pensioners)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the proportion of pensioners living in fuel poverty aged (a) 65 to 69, (b) 70 to 79 and (c) 80 years and above, broken down by (i) Government offices of the regions, (ii) groups of authorities with similar characteristics and (iii) area types based on the English House Conditions Survey Data for (A) 1991 and (B) 1996. [136221]

Mr. Meacher: There are two main definitions of a fuel poor household:

(a) If, in order to maintain a satisfactory heating regime, it would be required to spend more than 10 per cent. of all income (including Housing Benefit and Income Support for Mortgage Interest) on all household fuel use.

(b) If, in order to maintain a satisfactory heating regime, it would be required to spend more than 10 per cent. of its income (excluding Housing Benefit and Income Support for Mortgage Interest) on all household fuel use.

The 1991 English House Conditions Survey (EHCS) was based on a smaller sample of homes, and collected less information on each, compared to the 1996 survey. As a result it is not possible to provide the information requested without undue expenditure, and indeed if at all. The information that is available is shown in the table and is based on the definition at (b) above.

Number of fuel poor households[1] aged 60 years or more based on data from the 1991 English House Condition Survey

Couple aged 60 or more	44	3,096
One person aged 60 or more	80	2,840

[1] Based on the definition at (b) above.

Using data from the 1996 EHCS, the tables set out the breakdown of older fuel poor households by Government office region and also by type of location. In order to be statistically valid, some of the categories requested have been grouped together. A breakdown is not available on the basis of groups of local authorities which have similar characteristics.

Green Ministers

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the Second Annual Green Ministers' report. [138407]

Mr. Meacher: I am delighted to announce that "Greening Government: the 2nd Annual Report of the Green Ministers Committee" will be published tomorrow. It provides a comprehensive account of the work of Green Ministers over the past year, and sets out our future work programme. The report reflects Green Ministers' increasing focus on integrating sustainable development into Government policies, as well as our continuing efforts to improve the environmental performance of Government operations. There is a considerable amount of information at Department level to enable the reader to understand the progress each Department has made in all areas of our work.

Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Cross-loaded Timber (HGVs)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will instruct the Road Transport Laboratory to undertake research into the safety of cross-loaded timber on commercial heavy goods vehicles; [136184]

(2) when he next expects to issue revised guidelines to road haulage contactors and their trade organisations about the safety requirements of cross-loaded timber on heavy goods vehicles; [136185]

(3) how many accidents have been reported in the last five years involving heavy goods vehicles carrying cross-loaded timber; [136186]

(4) what estimate he has made of the potential increase in the volume of timber to be transported from forests in the United Kingdom over the next five years; and how much of such timber he estimates will be carried on lorries using cross-loaded decks. [136187]

Mr. Hill: It is estimated that there will be a 13 per cent. increase in timber production over the next five years. It is not clear how much of that increase will be transported as cross-loaded timber.

There is no detailed statistical information available about accidents caused by insecure loading of cross-loaded timber.

My Department, in conjunction with those from the Health and Safety Executive, the Forestry Commission and the timber industry, are investigating whether it is safe to carry cross-loaded timber on goods vehicles. The findings of these investigations may result in specific research being commissioned.

The conclusions drawn from investigations and any resultant research will be added to the revision of my Department's Code of Practice on the Safety of Loads on Goods Vehicles. The industry has also agreed to amend its own code of practice in line with any conclusions. The review of my Department's code will be widely consulted on and, when complete, will be publicised within the haulage industry generally, including the trade organisations. The timescale will depend on what research, if any, is carried out and is unlikely to run beyond the end of 2001.

Town Improvement Schemes

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, (1) pursuant to Cm 4917, if he will list the criteria for qualifying as a town improvement scheme; [138199]

(2) what businesses are to be included under his proposals for a supplementary business rate for funding town improvement schemes; and what the rates will be; [138198]

(3) pursuant to Cm 4917, if he will list the criteria for a local tax reinvestment programme; and how he will evaluate successful regeneration. [138200]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Details of our proposals for a supplementary business rate and for a local tax reinvestment programme are contained in the Green Paper "Modernising Local Government Finance" (19 September 2000). The consultation period ends on 8 December.

Under our proposals, the supplementary rate would be limited to a maximum of 1 per cent. of the national rate per year, up to a ceiling of 5 per cent. The supplement could be raised from all non-domestic ratepayers in a smaller area such as a town centre, subject to agreement by a majority of the ratepayers affected, for use in ways agreed between the ratepayers and the council. The Green Paper suggests that this could be one way of funding town improvement schemes. The only criterion would be that use of the supplementary rate in this way would need to be agreed between a local council and its ratepayers.

Possible criteria for establishing and evaluating a local tax re-investment programme (LTRP) are included for consultation in Appendix 2 to Annex F of the Green Paper. A copy of this Appendix will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

City Growth Strategies

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what funding is to be available to RDAs to develop city growth strategies; and what the scope of these strategies will be. [138244]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Funding has been made available as part of the 2000 Spending Review. Regional Development Agencies and the Small Business Service will have a key role to play in developing City Growth Strategies, as part of their shared purpose to promote enterprise in the regions and across society.

These strategies will map the economic asset base and develop detailed action plans for business growth in a number of key cities over three years.

Emergency Tug (Pentland Firth)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from the Chairman of the Scottish Environment Protection Agency about the all year round siting of an emergency tug in the Pentland Firth; and if he will make a statement. [138019]

Mr. Hill: The Chairman of the Scottish Environment Protection Agency wrote to my noble Friend the Minister for Transport about emergency towing vessel provision in the Minches and Pentland Firth on 10 July 2000. I replied to him on 10 November 2000.

Wetlands

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish further guidance on the protection of sites listed as wetlands of international importance under the Ramsar Convention. [138408]

Mr. Meacher: The Government are fully committed to meeting their obligations under the Ramsar Convention. We believe that wetland sites listed under the Convention should be accorded the highest level of protection available. The comprehensive policy statement I have published today on the protection and management of Ramsar sites in England places Ramsar sites on the same footing as sites designated as part of the European Union's Natura 2000 network and gives clear guidance to local planning authorities and other public bodies on how that protection should be delivered

Ramsar sites in England—A policy statement

Introduction

1. The Convention on Wetlands of International Importance especially as Waterfowl Habitat (the 'Ramsar Convention'), signed in Ramsar, Iran, in 1971, is an intergovernmental treaty which provides the framework for the conservation and wise use of wetlands and their resources by national action and international co-operation as a contribution to achieving sustainable development throughout the world. In May 2000 there were 121 Contracting Parties to the Convention. The UK ratified the Convention in 1976. The UK Government is fully committed to effective implementation of the Convention.

2. One of the main means by which the Ramsar Convention seeks to conserve wetlands and wetland interests is through the listing of sites on the Ramsar List of Wetlands of International Importance. In May 2000 there were 1,027 wetland sites covering over 78 million hectares on the Ramsar List. At that time the UK had listed 157 sites covering almost 738,000 hectares.

3. The Joint Nature Conservation Committee, the Government's statutory adviser on international conservation matters, is currently carrying out a review of the UK Ramsar site list, taking account of the Convention's Resolution VII.11 (Strategic Framework and Guidelines for the Future Development of the List of Wetlands of International Importance of the Convention on Wetlands). It is the Government's intention to publish a revised site list before the 8th Conference of Contracting Parties (COP) in 2002 and to designate any new sites which meet the selection criteria by COP9 in 2005. This will contribute towards the Ramsar Convention's own target of 2000 listed sites globally by 2005.

4. This statement sets out the Government's policies for the protection and management of Ramsar sites in England, of which there were 75 covering over 361,000 hectares at the end of May 2000. Matters relating to the management and protection of Ramsar sites in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland fall to the devolved administrations of those countries.

Ramsar sites in England—the current position

5. All terrestrial areas included within listed Ramsar sites in England are currently Sites of Special Scientific Interest (SSSI) and it is the Government's firm intention that this will continue to be the case. As such they are subject to the same arrangements as for other SSSIs notified by English Nature. The Countryside and Rights of Way Bill currently before Parliament will substantially enhance the protection available to SSSIs and to make it easier for English Nature to create the conditions for their conservation interests to be managed positively. As such the Countryside and Rights of Way Bill changes will make a very substantial contribution to meeting the Government's obligations under the Convention.

6. Paragraph C7 of the current Planning Policy Guidance on Nature Conservation (PPG9) published in 1994 extends the same protection at a policy level to listed Ramsar sites in respect of new development as that afforded to sites which have been designated under the Birds and Habitats Directives as part of the EU Natura 2000 network.

7. Article 6 of the Habitats Directive (as transposed into UK law through the Conservation (Natural Habitats, &c.) Regulations 1994 as amended otherwise referred to as 'the Habitats Regulations') requires that any new development proposal likely to have a significant impact on a Natura 2000 site is assessed for its implications on that site in view of the site's conservation objectives. If that assessment concludes that the project would have an adverse effect on the integrity of the site it can only proceed, in the absence of alternatives, in the overriding public interest. In addition, compensatory measures must be taken to maintain the coherence of the Natura 2000 network. The Government's Outline Position Statement on the Birds and Habitats Directive published in May 1998 (otherwise referred to as the Government Statement) gave further guidance on the application of Article 6.

8. It is the Government's intention to bring forward revised Planning Policy Guidance on Nature Conservation once the Countryside and Rights of Way Bill has completed its passage through Parliament. It will continue to apply as a matter of policy substantially the same framework to listed Ramsar sites as to Natura 2000 sites. Paragraphs 15–27 of this policy statement draw attention to, and provide further guidance on, how that framework will be applied to Ramsar sites.

Relationship to Natura 2000

9. In May 2000 there were 79 Special Protection Areas (SPAs) classified under the Birds Directive and 148 candidate Special Areas of Conservation (SACs) under the Habitats Directive covering almost 990,000 hectares in England. The Government has recently initiated consultation on substantial additions to its list of candidate SACs which will increase the proportion of SSSIs in the Natura 2000 network to around 75 per cent. by area.

10. Of the 75 English Ramsar sites at the end of May 2000, only 6 were completely outside the Natura 2000 network of sites. The remaining 69 were either coincident with or substantially overlapping SPAs or candidate SACs. The Government does not envisage that the proportion of Ramsar sites outside the Natura 2000 network is likely to change substantially in the light of planned revisions to both site networks.

Management issues

11. English Nature, the Government's statutory adviser on nature conservation matters in England, is charged with ensuring promotion of the conservation and wise use of all Ramsar sites through management and various other measures. In May 2000, 70 per cent. of Ramsar sites were in favourable or improving condition. English Nature's objective is to increase this to 75 per cent. by 2002, to 80 per cent. by 2004, and to exceed 95 per cent. by 2010.

12. Resolution V.7 adopted by the Ramsar Convention in 1993 requires that all Ramsar sites should have a management plan. All areas included within English Ramsar sites have some type of management plan incorporating conservation objectives for the Ramsar interests. Where the management plan for a site covers more than one designation, English Nature has been asked to ensure that plans adequately cover the Ramsar interests especially where these may be broader than Natura 2000 interests. They have also been asked to ensure that plans are consistent with the international best practice guidance contained in the Ramsar Toolkit (see paragraph 29).

13. All statutory bodies involved in funding conservation, both on designated sites and in the wider countryside, are encouraged to develop and use schemes to support the positive management of Ramsar sites and their interests.

Countryside and Rights of Way Bill

14. The Bill places a new duty on the Secretary of State to notify the statutory nature conservation agencies of Ramsar designations in England and Wales and, in turn, on the agencies to inform owners and occupiers and other specified bodies. This duty will bring the notification procedures for Ramsar sites in line with those for sites designated as SSSI, SAC and SPA.

Planning policies

15. Most new development proposals likely to affect a Ramsar site will require an Environmental Impact Assessment under the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 as amended. In applying the provisions of the Habitats Regulations to Ramsar sites, PPG9 requires that all development proposals likely to have a significant effect on such a site shall be subject to an 'appropriate assessment' of the implications for the site in view of that site's conservation objectives. This includes any proposal which a statutory body or 'competent authority' proposes to undertake itself. In carrying out an assessment the competent authority is required to consult English Nature and have regard to any representations made. In order fully to meet that policy obligation, the authority will need to ensure that its assessment takes into account the full range of Ramsar interests for which the site has been designated and their vulnerabilities to any effects of the proposed development.

16. Competent authorities are required by the Habitats Regulations to undertake an appropriate assessment of any plan or project likely to have a significant effect on a Natura 2000 site. Where Ramsar sites are coincident with or overlap Natura 2000 sites, authorities also need to ensure that their assessment takes fully into account the Ramsar interests on the site and any additional vulnerabilities that they may have to the effects of the proposal in order to fulfil their policy obligations under PPG9.

17. Wetland sites are some of the most fragile and vulnerable sites in the SSSI series, often subject to hydrological or other changes which occur both on and off site. Assessments need to take particular care to consider indirect effects as well as direct effects of proposals and the cumulative effects of piecemeal development.

Special considerations

18. The Government Statement of May 1998 on the Birds and Habitats Directives gave extensive guidance on the application of Article 6 of the Habitats Directive and relevant factors to be weighed when making judgments about overriding public interest. In reaching decisions on Ramsar sites, it will be necessary to take into account the wording of Article 4 of the Ramsar Convention, which allows a Contracting Party to delete or restrict the boundaries of sites 'in its urgent national interest'.

19. The general principles expounded in paragraphs 8 to 11 of the Statement on the Birds and Habitats Directives should be followed when applying the provisions of PPG9 to listed Ramsar sites. The Government's view is that a development proposal does not necessarily have to be of national significance in its own right to meet the requirements set out in Article 4 of the Convention. Any benefits arising from the proposal must, however, demonstrably outweigh the acknowledged international conservation value of the site. Projects of limited regional or local significance are thus unlikely to meet this test.

20. Article 4 of the Ramsar Convention requires Contracting Parties which delete sites or restrict site boundaries to provide compensatory measures for the loss of conservation interests. It is the Government's view that compensatory measures should provide, as a minimum, no net loss to the overall value of the national Ramsar site series either by way of quality or area. It is the Government's view that the principles expounded in paragraph 11 of the Government Statement on the Birds and Habitats Directives should also apply when it comes to compensatory measures for lost Ramsar interests, namely there must be a reasonable expectation that any such measures involving habitat recreation or restoration will be successful and that any such measures will be delivered within a timescale which secures the continuing nature conservation interests of any species present. The Government expects that a suitable package of compensatory measures will normally be a condition of any consent given and that wherever possible the developer will bear the cost of any such measures under the polluter pays principle.

Other development and consent regimes

21. Ramsar sites are potentially vulnerable to developments regulated by regimes other than the development control framework. For example, the Environment Agency regulates a wide range of waste management, discharge and water abstraction activities. Ministers expect that those, including the Government themselves, who have responsibility for such regimes should follow the policy approach advocated in PPG9 in respect of developments likely to have significant impacts on listed Ramsar sites.

Reviews of consents

22. Regulation 50 of the Habitats Regulations as amended requires the review of extant (i.e. unimplemented or partially implemented) consents on Natura 2000 sites. There are no such provisions for Ramsar sites and it has, to date, been the major difference between the two.

23. For the overwhelming majority of Ramsar sites, reviews of consents on Natura 2000 sites under the Regulation 50 provisions will normally be sufficient to ensure the Ramsar interests are adequately protected.

24. Local planning authorities are expected to extend the scope of their appropriate assessments when carrying out Regulation 50 reviews on Natura 2000 sites to consider the effects on coincident or overlapping Ramsar sites. Where the planning authority reaches the conclusion that there would be no adverse effect on the integrity of the Natura 2000 site from allowing the consent to proceed, but there would be an adverse effect on integrity on the Ramsar site, it should consider whether to issue a modification or revocation order using powers available under Section 97 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990. In cases where the authority considers modification or revocation is warranted, the Government will consider reimbursing local authorities where the costs were high, where the action taken was no more than necessary to remove the risk to the site, and less costly alternatives have been fully explored.

25. Local planning authorities are expected to adopt a similar approach where listed Ramsar sites are not within the Natura 2000 network, by carrying out an appropriate assessment analogous to that required by Regulation 50 and by issuing modification or revocation orders under Section 97 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, at the earliest opportunity following the listing of a Ramsar site. Where the integrity of a Ramsar site would be adversely affected by the full implementation of an extant consent and modification or revocation of the consent is warranted, the Government will again consider reimbursing local authorities where the costs were high, where the action taken was no more than necessary to remove the risk to the site, and less costly alternatives have been fully explored.

26. The Government expect competent authorities, other than planning authorities, to use whatever review powers are available within the regimes they administer to address any potential adverse effects on the integrity of listed Ramsar sites from extant consents by adopting a general approach analogous to that advocated for planning authorities in paragraphs 24 & 25 above.

27. It is the Government's view that the additional call on public funds arising from the application of paragraphs 24 to 26 is not likely to be significant given the very high proportion of the Ramsar site series which is already covered by the Natura 2000 network and the review provisions of Regulation 50 of the Habitats Regulations. These existing measures are expected to protect the Ramsar interests in the vast majority of cases.

Wider issues

28. Designated sites are to a greater or lesser degree affected by activities which occur away from or adjacent to those sites, as well as those on site. Wetland sites are especially vulnerable to factors such as hydrological change within or adjacent to the site. The Countryside and Rights of Way Bill places a duty on public bodies to 'further the conservation and enhancement' of Sites of Special Scientific Interest. The Government expect that public bodies, in meeting that new obligation, will pay particular attention to the needs of listed Ramsar sites. Where they have not done so already, public bodies will need to incorporate these considerations into their strategic thinking and planning mechanisms.

29. Article 3.1 of the Ramsar Convention requires Contracting Parties to 'formulate and implement their planning so as to promote the conservation of the wetlands included in the List, and, as far as possible the wise use of wetlands in their territory'. The Ramsar Convention has developed and adopted 'Guidelines for the Implementation of the Wise Use Concept'[1]. It has also recently published The Ramsar Handbooks on Wise Use[1], nine handbooks (referred to ask the "Ramsar Toolkit"), embodying the major 'best practice' guidelines developed and approved by the Conference of the Contracting Parties, complete with case studies, illustrations, and other helpful materials. The Government commend these documents to statutory bodies as valuable sources of further guidance and technical assistance on how issues of wise use should be addressed.

Highway Maintenance

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what resources he proposes to provide to allow local highway authorities to deal with the backlog in local highway maintenance; and if he will make a statement. [138259]

Mr. Hill: As set out in "Transport 2010: The 10 Year Plan" we are committed to providing sufficient funds to tackle the backlog of expenditure on carriageway, footway, bridge, and street lighting maintenance, estimated to be £7 billion in the next 10 years. In the forthcoming Local Transport Plan settlement we will provide £535 million to fund capital maintenance works on local highways in 2001–02 and £555 million in 2002–03. These are increases of 103 per cent. and 110 per cent. respectively compared with 2000–01. We have extended the settlement to cover non-principal roads as well as principal roads and bridges.

The allocations for local highway authorities in 2001–02 and 2002–03 are shown in the table, with the allocations for the current year for comparison. For the remaining three years of the five years of the Local Transport Plan settlement, authorities will receive at least 75 per cent. of their allocation for maintenance in 2002–03.

In addition, earmarked resources will be provided for new major maintenance schemes for the Central Motorway East in Newcastle and for the Silver Jubilee Bridge in Halton.

These capital resources provided through the Local Transport Plan settlement are in addition to the support for local highway maintenance provided through Revenue Support Grant.

The Local Transport Plan settlement does not cover London. Funding for local highway maintenance in London is a matter for the Mayor and Greater London Authority.

Notes:

1. The allocations for 2000–01 covered only principal roads and bridges. The allocations for 2001–02 and 2002–03 cover principal roads, non-principal roads, and bridges.
2. There is an element within the Standard Spending Assessment used to distribute Revenue Support Grant which covers revenue expenditure on local road maintenance, e.g. clearing snow, cleaning drains, grass cutting, etc.
3. These allocations are part of the overall Local Transport Plan settlement to be announced in December.
4. These figures do not include earmarked resources for ongoing major maintenance schemes in Bedfordshire, Devon, and Portsmouth or for new major maintenance schemes in Newcastle and Halton.

Funding for these schemes will amount to £7 million in 2001–02 and £10 million in 2002–03.

Global Warming

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the contribution of the aviation industry to global warming. [137748]

Mr. Mullin: We have not produced a UK assessment. The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change published their report, "Aviation and the Global Atmosphere", in December 1999. UK experts made significant contributions to the report on both science and technology. It considered all potential effects on the atmosphere and climate, up to 2050, from aviation emissions and identified the present and future impacts, on the basis of a range of scenarios, as well as remaining areas of uncertainty. The Government continue to support research to reduce these scientific uncertainties, and to improve technology.

Aircraft Detritus

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent discussions he has had with the CAA concerning frozen effluent falling from aeroplanes over residential areas. [137747]

Mr. Mullin: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of Thursday 25 November 1999, Official Report, column 171W.

The Secretary of State has not had any recent discussions with the CAA over such incidents. However the CAA is continuing to investigate icefall incidents whenever possible.

I understand the hon. Member met CAA staff on 18 May specifically to discuss icefalls, following which the CAA wrote to her on 26 May 2000 providing comprehensive details of icefall incidents. In the period 1 January 2000 to 1 November 2000, 36 incidents of icefall and 21 incidents of other falling objects were recorded. The average number of incidents recorded over the five-year period 1995–99 was 31.

The CAA places the primary emphasis on prevention, and both the Authority and airlines are putting a great deal of effort into eliminating icefalls by checking water systems for leaks. The CAA has also issued reminders to UK operators, by way of Airworthiness Directives, emphasising the importance of regular checks.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the proposal of a link road between a new junction 18a on the M4 and the Avon Ring Road was (a) first included and (b) removed from the Government's trunk road programme. [138229]

Mr. Hill: The proposal for a new link road and a new junction on the M4 was first put forward by the former Avon County Council in 1985. This was accepted in principle by the then Department of Transport, but was never included in the Government's trunk road programme.

Responsibility for the scheme passed to South Gloucestershire Council, following local government reorganisation. The Council subsequently carried out a review of a number of major road schemes in their area in the context of current Government transport policy and emerging development plan policies. As a result, they decided in 1999 not to pursue this particular scheme.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Recreational Craft Engines

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the implications of EC Directive 94/25/EC on small businesses engaged in the modification, upgrading and conversion to LPG of recreational craft engines. [137294]

Mr. Alan Johnson: No specific assessment has been made at present. EC Directive 94/25/EC on recreational craft (RCD) is principally concerned with the design and construction (in terms of safety) of such craft, as well as certain specified components for incorporation into craft (including fuel tanks and fuel hoses), when they are placed on the market or put into service for the first time in the European Economic Area (EEA). The RCD became mandatory on 16 June 1998. The object of the RCD is to allow the free trade in recreational craft and the specified components, while maintaining a high level of product safety. Any person placing those products on the EEA market, or putting them into use, since that date is obliged to meet the essential safety requirements covering for example hull strength, stability and buoyancy, as well as safety requirements concerned with the installation of the engine, fuel systems and fuel tanks. Meeting the requirements of the RCD and properly applying the CE marking confers the right to sell the craft anywhere in the EEA. Any subsequent modification, upgrading and conversion of a craft, concerned with the engine installation, is not currently within the scope of the RCD unless that modification, upgrading or conversion of the craft was so extensive that it amounted (in effect) to a "new" craft being produced for the purposes of the RCD. However it may be the case that, depending on where the craft is used, local "in use" safety regulations would need to be met as part of or following an engine modification.

The Commission has recently issued a proposal for the modification of the RCD which would (if adopted) include, in particular, requirements related to engine exhaust and noise emissions: the former would include propulsion engines subject to a "major engine modification" and the latter to recreational craft with engines that are subject to a "major craft conversion". Businesses are aware of this proposal but will be consulted as negotiations progress: A regulatory impact assessment is being commissioned. A public meeting has been arranged at the DTI on 15 January 2001, to which interested parties will be invited.

Mobile Telephones

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what independent research the Government have commissioned on the health aspects of using mobile telephones and the level of radiation from hands-free kits. [137773]

Ms Hewitt: The DTI commissioned independent tests, published in August, on the use of personal hands-free kits with mobile phones. The tests showed that use of hands-free kit reduced exposure when compared to normal use of the phone.

These tests were consistent with other tests that have been carried out internationally, but have been contradicted by studies commissioned by the Consumers' Association.

Both the Department and independent scientists have expressed reservations about the methodology employed in the Consumers' Association tests.

We are working with the Consumers' Association and urgently seeking to reconcile these conflicting test results.

Small Business Programme

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ensure that assets of the Learning and Business Link Company, Kent, including computers and servers, formerly the property of Business Link Kent and currently used by the chambers of commerce and enterprise, will be retained by the latter for use in the Small Business Programme. [137738]

Ms Hewitt: It is our objective that the transition from the existing BL network to the new SBS local network should be conducted in such a way as to ensure publicly funded assets continue to be used for the purposes for which they were intended. My officials are working with the organisations concerned in each area to ensure that this outcome is achieved to the greatest possible extent. I do not feel it would be appropriate to comment on the individual commercial negotiations concerned.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the waste incineration projects which have been approved under the terms of Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation, but which have yet to be built. [137394]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 9 November 2000]: A list of these projects is shown in the table.

Conoco Humber Refinery

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce his decision on Conoco Global Development UK Ltd.'s proposal to build a combined heat and power station at the Conoco Humber Refinery at South Killingholme. [138420]

Mrs. Liddell: I have today granted consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 to Conoco Global Power Developments UK Ltd. for the construction of a 475 megawatt gas-fired combined heat and power station at the Conoco Humber Refinery at South Killingholme in North Lincolnshire. The station has also today been given clearance as a gas-fired station under section 14 of the Energy Act 1976 and planning permission for the station has been deemed to be granted subject to 47 planning conditions agreed with the North Lincolnshire Borough Council.

The station will supply the energy requirements of the Conoco Humber Refinery and the Lindsay Oil Refinery and is the largest combined heat and power station given approval by the Government. This demonstrates our continued support to promote CHP stations, wherever practicable, and our commitment to reducing emissions of carbon to fulfil the promises we gave at Kyoto.

Copies of the Press Notice and decision letters are being placed in the Library of the House.

Green Technologies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on progress made by his Department's Joint Environmental Markets Unit in securing sales of British green technologies and services abroad. [137873]

Ms Hewitt: The Joint Environmental Market Unit's (JEMU's) role—working with others such as Trade Partners UK—is to promote the UK's environmental industry's capabilities and to help provide market access to relevant suppliers. JEMU has made good progress in implementing specific initiatives identified in its three year Business Plan, published in 1998. A key achievement has been the development of the first online database of UK environmental capabilities, providing a world wide shop window which enables companies to be contacted directly from one site. Representatives of the UK environmental industry have recently acknowledged JEMU's contribution to trade promotion as being relevant and effective.

MOX Fuel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representation his Department received at the Plutonium 2000 Conference held in

Brussels in October; and what assessment he has made of the presentation made on the business viability of BNFL's plutonium MOX fuel plans. [137870]

Mrs. Liddell: Officials from my Department attended the Plutonium 2000 Conference but received no formal representations.

Presentations made at the Conference will be considered in the context of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions' forthcoming consultation document on Radioactive Waste Management as appropriate.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much he has spent on the development of (a) on-shore wind generated power, (b) biomass energy, (c) wave generated power, (d) Solar energy and (e) off-shore wind power in each year since 1995. [137213]

Mrs. Liddell: The DTI's new and renewable energy programme supports research, development and demonstration, as well as technology transfer and export promotion activities. The breakdown of net expenditure on specific technologies is as shown.

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
(a) On-shore wind	3.4	2.5	1.2	1.0	0.9
(e) Off-shore wind[1]
(b) Biomass energy	3.4	2.7	1.4	1.2	1.6
(c) Wave power	0.08	0.14	0.06	0.17	0.15
(d) Solar energy[2]	1.9	2.0	1.7	1.0	1.3

[1] Historically data are not broken down between on-shore and off-shore wind technologies.
[2] Up to 1998 the solar programme was focused on passive solar design of buildings. Since then work has primarily focused on photovoltaics.

Oil

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the environmental impact of using oil as an energy source. [137218]

Mrs. Liddell: A number of representations have been received, including from business organisations.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department (a) has taken and (b) intends to take to address the environmental impact of using oil as an energy source. [137219]

Mrs. Liddell: Environmental issues related to the extraction of oil are regulated in the main according to the Offshore Petroleum Production and Pipe-lines (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1999. Other environmental legislation such as the Prevention of Oil Pollution Act 1971 also applies. The environmental aspects of oil production are kept under review and it is planned to introduce further legislation to deal with specific aspects.

UK refineries have invested heavily in recent years to meet rising environmental standards, influenced—among other requirements—by the EU's Auto-Oil programme. They are regulated under the Integrated Pollution Prevention and Control regime. All oil-fired Large Combustion Plant will be controlled through the revised EU Large Combustion Plant Directive. In addition, the UNECE Gothenburg Protocol and the proposed EU National Emissions Ceiling Directive will set annual emission ceilings for sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxides and volatile organic compounds from 2010.

Emissions attached to the final use of oils in transport are the responsibility of the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Much of the industrial use of oil will come under the requirements of the Integrated Pollution Prevention and Control regime.

Compensation Claims

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking to speed up the process of settling outstanding compensation claims. [136961]

Mrs. Liddell: In relation to claims for respiratory disease, progress has been too slow. However, in September I announced a twin track approach.

Firstly, we are making offers of increased amounts as expedited payments to thousands of miners and are extending expedited offers to some claimants not previously eligible, without them undergoing further tests. To date we have already made some 9,720 additional and new offers totalling £32.4 million. Altogether we hope to make over 19,000 offers totalling around £100 million before Christmas.

In addition, I announced an increase in the numbers of medical testing centres and record scanning teams. We are also seeking to streamline the Medical Assessment Process and records collection, and these proposals are being taken forward with the claimants' solicitors.

On Vibration White Finger, we aim to have carried out initial assessments on all the existing claimants by the end of next year. A further assessment may be required for those claimants seeking compensation for loss of services but this is still under consideration.

In total, this Government have now paid out some £250 million in respect of the liabilities we inherited from British Coal.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Physical Education

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the average time is spent by each pupil per week on physical education in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools. [134709]

Jacqui Smith: The total number of hours spent on Physical Education is not available as the length of the school week varies from school to school. However, recent research by MORI confirms that the most popular out-of-school hours learning activity was participating in sport. It shows that the vast majority of schools have increased their extracurricular activities over the last two years. We have set an aspiration that all schools should provide two hours of curricular or extracurricular activities a week, and we are working to encourage schools and partners in the sports sector to deliver this through the Sports Strategy, an important part of which is promoting team games.

Individual Learning Accounts

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on progress in developing Individual Learning Accounts. [137369]

Mr. Wicks: According to the latest figures, people in England had opened around 400,000 Individual Learning Accounts. This represents good progress towards meeting the UK target of 500,000 accounts opened by March 2001 and of one million accounts by April 2002.

Higher Education

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many higher education places were available in each of the past 20 years; and how many will be available in the next three years. [137829]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 10 November 2000]: Available data are provided in the table. The Department has funded additional planned higher education places: 36,000 in 1999–2000; 35,000 in 2000–01 and 45,000 in 2001–02. Of these additional places, 7 per cent. were for full-time undergraduates doing first degrees and the rest were for part-time students, post-graduates and students studying for courses below first degree level. Part-time undergraduates, who are mostly mature students, accounted for 57 per cent. of the additional places. Places beyond 2001–02 have not yet been decided. A complete time series is not available, but the table shows the recent trend and the projected impact of additional funded and non-funded places.

School Standards

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what his assessment is of the recent research commissioned from the London School of Economics and Exeter University about the effect of (a) class sizes and (b) good teaching on school standards. [137913]

Ms Estelle Morris: The report commissioned from the London School of Economics and Exeter University into the relationship between resource allocation and educational attainment confirmed our view that a number of factors have an effect on pupil attainment. These include smaller infant classes and better quality teaching, both of which we were elected to deliver. The review also concluded that the quality of existing UK research is poor. This is why the Value for Money Unit is pursuing further research into the relationship between resource allocation and educational attainment.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Rolls-Royces

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 17 July, Official Report, column 23W, what criteria are used when deciding whether to acquire a Rolls-Royce for HM missions overseas. [134980]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 26 October 2000]: At present the FCO has purchased Rolls-Royces for official use by Heads of Mission at three of our key Posts, Washington, Tokyo and New Delhi. We also lease Rolls-Royces at eight other Posts where this provides value for money.

Employment Directive

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many letters he has received alleging that there was a threat to religious freedom posed by the EU directive on employment agreed between the Governments of the EU on 17 October. [135067]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities on 6 November 2000, Official Report, column 39W.

China

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if human rights concerns were raised during the recent United Kingdom/China Forum held in Beijing. [135770]

Mr. Battle: The UK/China Forum is a non-governmental group. It provides a framework for building a network of influential high-level personal contacts between Britain and China, and aims to develop initiatives to build stronger UK/China links in the specific areas covered by its seven sub-committees: Environment, Media, Culture, Education, Industry, Finance and Law.

The second meeting of the Forum took place in Beijing from 16–17 October. Human rights were not on the agenda for this meeting.

The meeting of the Forum coincided with the fifth round of the UK/China Human Rights Dialogue which was held in London from 16–18 October. HMG's concerns on China's human rights record were raised extensively during the Dialogue.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out, including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the constituency, the effect on the Manchester, Gorton constituency, of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [136168]

Mr. Vaz: We hold no information of the kind sought by my right hon. Friend. The Mission of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is to promote the national interests of the United Kingdom and to contribute to a strong world community. For details of the Government's achievements in meeting its foreign policy targets, the following page of the FCO website may be helpful: http://www.fco.gov.uk/directory/dynpage.asp?Page=108

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his policy that the outer wall of sanctions against Yugoslavia should be lifted. [136969]

Mr. Vaz: No "outer wall" of sanctions is operated by the United Kingdom or by the European Union. In common with all countries, the FRY will need to show its commitment to the obligations which flow from the membership of international organisations, including major financial institutions, and to those organisations' values.

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent changes have been made to EU sanctions in relation to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. [138419]

Mr. Vaz: Following the election of Vojislav Kostunica as President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY), European Union Foreign Ministers agreed at the General Affairs Council on 9 October to revise EU sanctions against the FRY and to retain specific targeted measures.

The EU oil embargo and flight ban were lifted with effect from 9 October.

On 10 November the Council of the EU adopted a Common Position to restrict financial sanctions and the visa ban to Milosevic and persons associated with him.

The provisions on financial sanctions were implemented by an EC Regulation adopted on 10 November. This Regulation repeals EC Regulations 1294/99 and 607/2000 as well as Article 2 of EC Regulation 926/98. The Regulation will come into force this week with its publication of the Official Journal of the European Communities.

The new Regulation provides that all funds held in the EU belonging to individuals listed in the annex to the Regulation shall be frozen and that no funds shall be made available, directly or indirectly, to or for the benefit of any person listed in the annex.

Under the new Regulation all EU financial sanctions in relation to FRY companies will be lifted. All EU restrictions on the provision of export credit support finance and on investment in the FRY will also be lifted.

UK legislation providing penalties for breaches of the financial sanctions will be amended to take account of the new Regulation.

The individuals subject to financial sanctions are identical to those subject to the EU visa ban, which is the subject of a Council Decision of 10 November.

The EU arms embargo and embargo on the supply to the FRY of equipment which might be used for internal repression or terrorism are unaffected. The UN arms embargo against the FRY and prohibition on the arming and training for terrorist activities there remain in force.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he is giving to Yugoslavia to help the refugee population in Serbia. [136970]

Mr. Foulkes: I have been asked to reply.

We are providing £10 million for Serbia in immediate bilateral assistance to including medicines, food and essential items for both the general and refugee populations. This includes £2 million for UNHCR to provide fuel, clothing, blankets and winterisation of collective accommodation housing 50,000 refugees.

Our main contribution to refugees in Serbia is through our share of European Community programmes. The European Community Humanitarian Office (ECHO) programme in Serbia focuses on refugees and on the sick and elderly in the host population. ECHO provided 84 million euros in such assistance in 1999 of which we contributed £9.2 million. Its programme of 73 million euros in 2000 includes 18 million euros, of which we contribute £1.95 million, to assist with winterisation needs of refugees and vulnerable groups. This has been provided from the EC's special programme of 200 million euros immediate humanitarian assistance, which is providing food, medicines, energy and support to schools and municipalities. This aid will provide support to both the refugee and general populations.

Sudan

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will call for a formal investigation by the appropriate UN authorities into allegations of chemical weapons used by the Government of Sudan against civilians. [137106]

Mr. Hain: These allegations relate to alleged attacks in Southern Sudan in late July 1999 by the Government of Sudan against rebel forces during the civil conflict in progress at the time. Samples from the site of the alleged attacks have been analysed at the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, Porton Down for the most likely CW agents. The tests found no evidence that these agents had been used. We duly informed the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) of our results as the OPCW is recognised by the UN as the competent body for handling CW issues.

Kadiatou Balde

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the British Embassy in Dakar has been informed of the decision of the Appeals Tribunal in the case of Kadiatou Balde from Guinea; and if she will be permitted to enter the UK. [137112]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 7 November 2000]: The British Embassy in Dakar has been informed of the decision. Kadiatou Balde will be able to obtain her visa from the Embassy today, provided that her circumstances have not changed.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if it is in the United Kingdom's national interest to relinquish the United Kingdom's veto on incentive measures in the cultural field at the forthcoming IGC; [137584]

(2) if it is in the national interest to relinquish the United Kingdom's veto on proposals relating to social security for migrant workers at the forthcoming IGC; [137586]

(3) if it is in the United Kingdom's national interest to relinquish the veto on the establishment of European Union agencies at the forthcoming IGC. [137589]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 30 October 2000, Official Report, column 238W.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is in the United Kingdom's national interest to relinquish the veto on proposals relating to social security at the forthcoming IGC. [137585]

Mr. Vaz: The Government have made it clear on numerous occasions that they will not relinquish the veto on social security.

Schools (Palestine)

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received about when the Palestinian Authority plans to reopen schools in the areas under its jurisdiction. [R] [137498]

Mr. Hain: The Palestinian Authority reopened the majority of its schools, colleges and universities on 7 October. They had been closed from 29 September until 7 October for security reasons. Some establishments have remained closed because of continuing operational difficulties.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Palestinian Authority regarding the reopening of schools. [R] [137499]

Mr. Hain: Most schools were reopened on 7 October.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received regarding the closure of Palestinian schools in recent weeks. [R] [137497]

Mr. Hain: The Palestinian Authority closed all its schools, colleges and universities from 29 September until 7 October, when the majority reopened. Schools operated by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) were closed for the same period. Some establishments remain closed because of the continuing operational difficulties.

Qualified Majority Voting

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the issues that have been tabled by EU member states and the Commission for discussion at the IGC relating to qualified majority voting; [137897]

(2) if he will list those areas of extension of qualified majority voting that are proposed by (a) EU member states and (b) EU bodies; [137966]

(3) further to his reply of 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 534–35W, on the Intergovernmental Conference, if he will list those minor issues not listed, but which are also on the agenda for the IGC. [137685]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the website www.europa.eu.int, where he will find the official documents relating to the Intergovernmental Conference.

Lomé Peace Accords

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 25 October 2000, Official Report, columns 145–46W, on the Lomé Peace Accords, what the nature was of the close touch maintained. [137995]

Mr. Hain: Representatives of HMG were present throughout the Lomé Peace negotiations as observers. British observers, along with other international representatives facilitating the negotiations, helped to maintain contact and dialogue between the parties, and between the parties and the Togolese Chair.

European Federation

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 557W, on European federation, which further powers (a) need to be transferred from the United Kingdom Parliament and (b) require QMV decision-making procedures to be applied, to fulfil his Department's policy objectives. [137684]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 30 October 2000, Official Report, column 238W.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 557W, on European federation, if he will list those EU countries which share his policy objective. [137762]

Mr. Vaz: All EU Governments support a European Union which respects the national identities of its member states.

Iraq

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the UN arrangements to ensure that goods imported into Iraq under the oil-for-food scheme are for the agreed purposes. [137680]

Mr. Hain: The UK Government does all it can to ensure that goods imported into Iraq under UNSCR 986 are used for agreed purposes. Our experts scrutinise all contracts carefully to ensure that they fall within the terms of the relevant UN resolutions. We frequently discuss monitoring of oil-for-food goods in Iraq with the office of Iraq programme and, where goods are of concern, ask for specific in-country monitoring. Of particular concern are goods identified by UNMOVIC as of potential use in weapons of mass destruction programmes. We continually call for the Iraqi regime to allow UNMOVIC into Iraq to verify Iraq's compliance with its obligation to halt its weapons of mass destruction programme.

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the number of children in Iraq who are chronically malnourished and the proportion of the total number of children this represents. [137682]

Mr. Hain: There are no reliable figures on child malnutrition in the centre and south of Iraq. Despite UN efforts, the Iraqi regime has refused to cooperate with a group of independent experts appointed by the UN to prepare a comprehensive report and analysis of the humanitarian situation in Iraq. In the meantime the UK continues to advocate and support initiatives through the oil-for-food programme to better target the UN's humanitarian effort to help the most vulnerable in Iraq. This has already improved the situation on the ground. In northern Iraq, for example, where the UN rather than Iraqi authorities run the humanitarian programme, infant mortality is now lower than before sanctions were imposed.

Zanzibar

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the (a) first and (b) second elections in Zanzibar. [137940]

Mr. Hain: We have been following the situation in Zanzibar with concern. Commonwealth and other international observers were unanimous in their condemnation of the organisation of the elections on 29 October. We, with EU colleagues, criticised the decision to rerun the elections in only 16 constituencies and under the supervision of the current electoral commission in a statement issued on 3 November.

We will continue to press the Tanzanian authorities to find a solution to the political crisis that respects the democratic and human rights of all Zanzibaris.

Rogue States

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the potential threat to (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the NATO area from rogue states. [138009]

Mr. Vaz: The Government continually reviews, in close consultation with our Allies, potential threats to the United Kingdom and to our NATO Allies from all sources.

Single European Foreign Policy

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 536W, on the single European Foreign Policy, if he will list the principal UK national foreign policy objectives which the EU's Common Foreign and Security Policy is a means of achieving. [137928]

Mr. Vaz: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office's nine objectives are stated in the department's Public Service Agreement. The EU's Common Foreign and Security Policy has contributed most notably to objectives one and four. Objective one is "A secure United Kingdom within a more peaceful and stable world" and objective four is "A strong international community; leading to an improved quality of life worldwide".

International Criminal Court

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 539W, for what reason the United Kingdom has not ratified the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court. [137921]

Mr. Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 565W.

Chagos Islands and Diego Garcia

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the return of displaced islanders to Diego Garcia. [137915]

Mr. Battle: We have decided to accept the ruling of the Court. The Ilois are now able to return to the outer islands of the British Indian Ocean Territory.

Our first priority is to press ahead with the technical work we have in hand to assess the feasibility of settlement on those islands. In the meantime we will be open to discussion with the Ilois community about the practicalities of any return. We will also be consulting the Governments of the United States and Mauritius about the implications of the judgment.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his assessment is of the security implications of the return of displaced islanders to Diego Garcia. [137907]

Mr. Battle: The Ilois are now free to return to the outer islands of the British Indian Ocean Territory but access to Diego Garcia will continue to be controlled strictly and will be by permit only.

We will be discussing the security implications of the court case on the US Naval Support Facility on Diego Garcia with the US authorities.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the assistance his Department intends to give to the displaced peoples of the Chagos Islands in British Indian Ocean Territory to return home. [137874]

Mr. Battle: Our first priority is to continue the work we have begun to assess the physical, financial, social, environmental and economic feasibility of settlement on the outer islands of the territory. Once we have the results of this feasibility study, we will be in a position to consider what further assistance might be appropriate.

Single European Currency

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had since 29 September with the foreign ministers of (a) France, (b) Germany and (c) Denmark about the single European currency. [137918]

Mr. Vaz: The Secretary of State meets other European Union foreign ministers on a regular basis and discusses a wide range of issues.

Middle East (Terrorist Threat)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment his Department has made of the terrorist threat to British visitors to Middle Eastern countries. [137916]

Mr. Hain: We have revised our travel advice notices to reflect the increased risk to British travellers to the Middle East as a result of heightened tensions in the region. Successive up-dates of travel advice for the countries affected have been available from the Travel Advice Unit and via the FCO website, www.fco.gov.uk.

International Relations

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with (a) Libya, (b) Iran, (c) Syria and (d) Yemen. [137917]

Mr. Hain: The United Kingdom enjoys full diplomatic relations with Libya, Iran, Syria and Yemen. We are constructively engaged with each country, and we continue to encourage them to play a positive role in the international community.

EU (Co-sovereignty)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 539W, what representations he has made to Germany in respect of the German Foreign Minister's proposal for co-sovereignty between states within the EU. [137904]

Mr. Vaz: Ministers regularly discuss EU issues with all EU partners. The Prime Minister made clear our position in his speech in Warsaw on 6 October.

Israel

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts he has had with the Israeli Government and when, to ascertain that equipment and components licensed for export to the Israeli armed forces by Her Majesty's Government since 1990 have not been used (a) against civilians in the Occupied Territories and (b) in southern Lebanon. [138071]

Mr. Hain: We are, and have been, in regular direct contact with the Israeli Government, including at senior Israeli military official level, as part of our inquiries to confirm that equipment and components licensed for export from the UK have not been used against civilians in the Occupied Territories or southern Lebanon.

Kosovo

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom police officers are serving with the United Nations International Police Force in Kosovo; how many of these officers are undertaking (a) a six-month and (b) a 12-month tour of duty; and if he will make a statement. [137123]

Mr. Hain: There are currently 136 UK police officers serving with the United Nations International Police in Kosovo. Of these, 107 are undertaking a 12-month tour of duty. The remaining 29 have completed a 12-month tour of duty which has, at their request, been extended by a further six months. None of the officers currently deployed is serving a six-month tour of duty.

Institutional Reform (EU)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations the Government have made in the Council of Ministers on the proposals in the paper CONFER 4790/00, 'Progress report on the intergovernmental conference on Institutional Reform', relating to the extension of qualified majority voting to Article 191; [138020]

(2) what representations the Government have made in the Council of Ministers on the proposals in the paper CONFER 4790/00, 'Progress report on the intergovernmental conference on Institutional Reform', relating to procedures for making regulations governing political parties at European level, with particular reference to their funding. [137977]

Mr. Vaz: Political parties at European level were first recognised in the Maastricht Treaty. The proposal for a legal base to allow the establishment of a Statute to regulate these parties is intended to ensure the transparency of their funding. We strongly support this aim.

The details of such a legal base are still under discussion.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made in the Council of Ministers on the proposals in the paper CONFER 4790/00, 'Progress report on the intergovernmental conference on Institutional Reform', relating to (1) enhanced co-operation measures; [137982]

(2) the new conditions for enhanced co-operation measures; [137981]

(3) the abolition of the national veto on enhanced co-operation measures; [137978]

(4) the application of enhanced co-operation procedure to Title V. [137983]

Mr. Vaz: The Prime Minister set out the Government's position on enhanced co-operation in his Warsaw speech on 6 October.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if it remains the Government's policy that immigration and asylum issues fall within the definition of border controls for the purpose of qualified majority voting; [137980]

(2) what representations the Government have made in the Council of Ministers on the proposals in the paper CONFER 4790/00, "Progress report on the intergovernmental conference on Institutional Reform", relating to the extension of qualified majority voting to aspects of asylum and immigration policy; [138021]

(3) what representations the Government have made in the Council of Ministers on the proposals in the paper CONFER 4790/00, "Progress report on the intergovernmental conference on Institutional Reform", relating to items for possible extensions of qualified majority voting. [137976]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 30 October 2000, Official Report, column 238W.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made in the Council of Ministers on the proposals in the paper CONFER 4790/00, 'Progress report on the intergovernmental conference on Institutional Reform', relating to the draft amendments to Article 7. [137979]

Mr. Vaz: The Government have made it clear that they are happy to discuss the proposal for a new early warning mechanism to be applied before any decision to take measures against a member state under Article 7 TEU. The details remain under negotiation.

Charter of Fundamental Rights

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made in the European Commission on the Commission's paper, 'On the Legal Nature of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union', with particular reference to the European Court of Justice's interpretation of the Charter. [137984]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 2 November 2000, Official Report, columns 555–56W and today, Official Report, col. 452–53W.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which rights contained in the draft EU Charter of Fundamental Rights are not identical to rights already incorporated in the European Convention on Human Rights. [137898]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him and the hon. Member for Stone (Mr. Cash) on 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 555W.

Child Soldiers

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards the ratification of the Optional Protocol on child soldiers to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. [137745]

Mr. Hain: The Government are working toward ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. The Ministry of Defence is currently drawing up administrative guidelines for the armed forces to implement this protocol, once they are in place, we hope to ratify the protocol. An initial target of January 2001 has been set.

North American Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the economic impact of NAFTA on the UK economy in the last five years. [136401]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

The Treasury has carried out no assessment of the economic impact of NAFTA on the UK economy over the last five years.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Burundi

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to provide support for the promotion of civil society in Burundi. [136457]

Clare Short: The first priority in Burundi is peace. We continue to provide financial assistance to the Arusha Peace Process and also humanitarian assistance through well established non-governmental organisations focusing on emergency healthcare and nutrition. As soon as peace is established we will consider providing further assistance for Burundi.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent reports she has received concerning the use of oil revenue from Sudanese oil fields for development projects. [135109]

Mr. Foulkes: We have seen some evidence that revenue is being directed to investment, especially roads and power generation. The Government of Sudan have also announced Sudanese Dinar 800m (US$ 3.118m) for development in the south through the Southern Sudan Co-ordinating Council. We are pressing for further clarification and will keep the situation under close review.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to review the provision of development aid to southern Sudan. [135108]

Mr. Foulkes: The first priority for the Sudan is a lasting political solution to the conflict. We believe development assistance will not be effective without peace. We need to strengthen the voices for peace among the ordinary Sudanese and are currently stepping up efforts to work more through church and other religious groups in the south and elsewhere. In the meantime, we will continue to give urgent humanitarian need top priority. We will also support and encourage good proposals from non-governmental organisations who can effectively reach the poorest groups in the country.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on progress in developing the new wharf at Jamestown, St. Helena. [138227]

Clare Short: A revised Wharf Improvement Project proposal was discussed with officials from my Department when they visited St Helena in July. The project is to be financed by the European Development Fund (EDF) but UK views will be taken into account when the project is considered by the EDF Committee. My officials were satisfied with the technical merits of the revised proposal. However, the St. Helena Government (SHG) have been asked to produce additional information on the health and safety benefits which underpin the economic case for this investment. This information has still to be provided. Subject to agreement on the economic case, we have advised SHG that we will support the project when it is submitted to the Committee for approval.

Health and Welfare Programmes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had in the last 12 months with leaders of Third World countries to develop health and welfare programmes. [137384]

Clare Short: Health issues have been included in most of my discussions during the past 12 months with leaders of poorer countries, with a focus on how we can assist them achieve the international development targets for health.

Kosovo

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much her Department has spent to date on clearing unexploded cluster munitions in Kosovo. [137987]

Clare Short: We have funded five organisations to carry out emergency clearance of anti-personnel landmines and unexploded ordnance, including cluster bomb units. Two of these organisations have been exclusively tasked with cluster munition clearance, while the other three have undertaken this task as part of a broader programme of unexploded ordnance clearance. We provided over £6 million during the 1999–2000 financial year for the clearance of mines and unexploded ordnance in Kosovo. So far this year we have committed a further £6.6 million.

NDPBs (Scotland)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the non-departmental public bodies responsible to her which have duties relating to Scotland, indicating their budget and staffing in Scotland, the number of Scottish board members and their emoluments. [137702]

Clare Short: There are no non-departmental bodies responsible to me that have duties relating to Scotland.

Malawi

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many staff her Department directly employs in Malawi. [136665]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department directly employs 34 members of staff in Malawi.

Mine Clearance (Africa)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department makes available to African countries which are not in conflict for mine clearance. [137944]

Clare Short: We continue to provide assistance for mine clearance to a number of African countries from our humanitarian mine action programme, which totalled some £15 million in 1999–2000. Currently, this includes Chad, Mozambique and Guinea Bissau. This assistance is channelled through the UN (including the United Nations Mine Action Service, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Office for Project Services) and other international organisations, national Mine Action Centres and NGOs, and includes strengthening indigenous capacity where possible. We also provide support to help countries ratify the Ottawa Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and their Destruction.

Vietnam

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department has provided for the floods in Vietnam; and what environmental management projects her Department supports in Vietnam. [135061]

Clare Short: We have provided a total of £1.15 million in response to the International Federation of the Red Cross and Crescent Societies (IFRC) Emergency Appeal to alleviate the suffering of flood victims in the Mekong watershed of Vietnam. This has contributed to meeting immediate needs (food, plastic sheeting and clothing) and to longer term livelihood support for families that will remain food insecure for some considerable time. Relief organisations placed a high priority on locally constructed boats to provide families with transport and the opportunity to catch and sell fish. This in turn assists families to buy rice and other staples and should reduce immediate dependence and bring medium-term benefits by re-establishing sustainable livelihoods. We have contributed a further £80,000 as our share of the European Commission Humanitarian Assistance to flood relief.

We have mainstreamed support for the environment rather than supporting specific environmental projects in Vietnam. We recognise that most environmental trends are adverse and have significant detrimental impacts on the health and livelihoods of poor people. Our rural poverty reduction programmes in Vietnam incorporate environmental and sustainability considerations. The Ha Tinh Poverty Alleviation Programme supports the construction of sea dykes, mangrove replanting and integrated pest management (IPM) all of which reduce vulnerability and improve people's livelihoods. Broader rural poverty reduction programmes currently being designed will incorporate environmental and sustainability perspectives, ensuring that rural infrastructure is assessed for environmental impact and seeking better ways of using natural resources in supporting the livelihoods of poor people.

We are also considering ways of mainstreaming sustainability issues within broader national policy formulation, through, for example, the Poverty Reduction Strategy process.

SCOTLAND

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137436]

Dr. Reid: I fully support the aims of the International Year of Volunteers. Everyone benefits from volunteering and the Prime Minister has issued a challenge to employers to give their employees paid time off to work in the community.

WALES

Prison/Police Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce legislation to devolve responsibility for the police service and for the prison service in Wales from the Home Office to the National Assembly for Wales. [138026]

Mr. Paul Murphy: No. The Government have no plans to transfer additional functions to the National Assembly.

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137439]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I fully support the aims of the International Year of Volunteers. Everyone benefits from volunteering and the Prime Minister has issued a challenge to employers to give their employees paid time off to work in the community. I intend to spend some time volunteering during 2001.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Carers

13. Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to help young carers. [136120]

Mr. Bayley: Social Security benefits are available for carers aged 16 and over. This means that measures recently announced, such as the increase in the Invalid Care Allowance earnings limit, the increase in carer premium and the extension of entitlement to Invalid Care Allowance for up to eight weeks after the disabled person dies, will help young carers, as well as others.

36. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further action he is taking to support carers. [136144]

Mr. Bayley: We recently announced steps to improve financial support for carers. We intend to:

Increase the carer premium in the Income Related benefits by £10 a week on top of next year's inflation uprating; increase the earnings limit in Invalid Care Allowance from £50 a week to the National Insurance Lower Earnings Limit, currently £67 per week; allow ICA to continue for up to eight weeks after the death of the person being cared for;

allow claims to ICA to be made from people aged 65 and over which will assist carers whose State pension is less than the rate of ICA and those who receive the Minimum Income Guarantee.

We will be seeking to introduce these changes as soon as the legislative timetable permits. The changes will help an estimated 300,000 carers at a cost of over £500 million over three years.

Tribunals

14. Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he has taken to ensure that tribunals which lie within his Department's responsibility meet the requirements of the Human Rights Act 1998 for independence. [136121]

Angela Eagle: My right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor appoints the panel members who sit on unified appeal tribunals within the Appeals Service. He introduced new administrative arrangements for judicial appointments, including part-time panel members, from 12 April 2000.

My right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor and my noble Friend the Lord Chief Justice consider that these arrangements put beyond reasonable doubt the safeguards guaranteeing the independence of judicial appointments.

Disability Benefits

17. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons have had their disability benefits cancelled over the most recent 12 month period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [136124]

Mr. Bayley: About 170,000 awards of Disability Living Allowance and 285,000 awards of Attendance Allowance were terminated in the 12 months ending 30 September 2000. Awards are terminated in a range of circumstances, including when people's condition improves, or they go to live abroad, die, or enter long-term residential care.

Minimum Income Guarantee

18. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have applied for the minimum income guarantee this year. [136125]

Mr. Darling: 220,000 pensioners have applied for the Minimum Income Guarantee between January and September this year.

21. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of pensioners who are entitled to the minimum income guarantee who do not claim it. [136128]

Mr. Rooker: From statistical surveys based on a 1 per cent. sample it has been estimated that around 500,000 pensioners could be entitled to Minimum Income Guarantee but do not claim it. We shall have a better idea of a figure when the present take-up campaign is concluded, during which we are making direct contact with 2.3 million pensioners.

23. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many senior citizens are eligible for the minimum income guarantee. [136130]

Mr. Rooker: Some 2 million pensioners either as single people or couples receive the Minimum Income Guarantee. Figures for those who might be entitled but are not claiming were based on a 1 per cent. sample. We shall have a better idea when the present take-up campaign is concluded, during which we are making direct contact with 2.3 million pensioners.

24. Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to help those pensioners whose small occupational pension schemes prevent them from receiving the minimum income guarantee. [136131]

Mr. Rooker: The new Pension Credit will help those on modest incomes with small occupational pensions firstly by introducing a new higher guaranteed income and secondly by rewarding savings income.

Social Fund

19. Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the operation of the social fund's budgeting loan scheme. [136126]

Angela Eagle: The changes we made to simplify the social fund budgeting loan scheme in April 1999 are working well. In its first year the new scheme helped more people on the lowest incomes by way of interest-free loans than ever before.

Pensioner Tax Credit

20. Mr. Lammy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received concerning the proposed pensioner tax credit. [136127]

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding the proposals for a pensioner tax credit. [136123]

Mr. Rooker: A number of representations have been received on this matter. A consultation paper on our proposals for the Pension Credit was published on 9 November. A copy has been placed in the Library.

27. Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the forthcoming Pensioner Tax Credit. [136134]

Mr. Rooker: We published our proposals for the Pension Credit last week. The plans are subject to public consultation.

Fraud

22. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the amount of benefit fraud detected since May 1997. [136129]

Mr. Rooker: The estimated loss due to fraud is £2 billion per year. We have now increased the targets for reducing the amount of fraud and error in the system. We are now aiming to reduce the losses from fraud and error in Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance, the two most vulnerable benefits, by 25 per cent. by March 2004, rising to 50 per cent. by March 2006.

30. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the progress of his initiatives to tackle Housing Benefit fraud. [136137]

Angela Eagle: We continue to give tackling Housing Benefit fraud a very high priority. One of our key objectives is to prevent fraud and error from entering the system. To this end, we are taking initiatives to ensure that information flows freely between local authorities and the Department:

We allocated £4 million funding to local authorities to install Remote Access Terminals (RATs), which give staff access to the Department's benefit systems. 404 local authorities have at least one RAT.

We have funded Electronic Transfer of Data (ETD). This means that many millions of paper forms, previously sent by the Benefits Agency to local authorities through the post, are now sent electronically.

Links between the Department's benefit systems and local authorities are complemented by other initiatives to prevent and detect fraud and error:

£100 million has been made available to local authorities to implement the Verification Framework by 2001. We have specified minimum standards for the verification of the identity of claimants, so preventing fraud from entering the system. To date, 253 local authorities have received set-up costs and 185 have been certified as compliant.

352 local authorities have signed up for the Royal Mail "Do not redirect" service funded by the Department. This prevents fraudsters having benefit mail redirected to a different address.

Reform of the anti-fraud financial incentive scheme is in progress, to ensure that local authorities can be rewarded for securing the end-to-end claims process.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 9 June 2000, Official Report, column 408W, on housing benefit fraud, if he will provide corresponding data for 1999–2000. [138048]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is not yet available for 1999–2000.

Winter Fuel Allowance

25. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking to ensure all pensioners receive their Winter Fuel Allowance before the end of this winter. [136132]

Angela Eagle: In order to make appropriate Winter Fuel Payments to those newly eligible as a result of the changes made to the scheme following the Taylor ruling, we asked that a claims process be developed as a matter of urgency. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced details of the claims process on 11 April. In parallel an information campaign—which includes national and regional press advertisements, a telephone helpline, leaflets, posters and the internet—aims to make existing and potential customers aware of the changes and what action, if any, is required.

In May this year we also wrote to around 1.2 million people, identified by the Department as being newly eligible for the payments, inviting them to claim.

The information campaign will continue to ensure that customers are kept fully informed.

On current plans, all payments should be made before the end of this winter—the end of March 2001. However, the timing of payments made to those who have to claim will depend upon when the claims are received.

For this winter—all automatic payments will be made before Christmas as will those in respect of claims that were returned before 22 September. Claims will still be processed if they are received after 22 September but payment before Christmas cannot be guaranteed. Claims for this winter's payments must be made—where necessary—before 31 March 2001.

For past winters, people must make a claim for each winter for which they think they may now be eligible. As at 6 November, over one million people had chosen to make a claim for payments in respect of previous winters and nearly one million payments have already been issued to people whose claim was successful. Because claims in respect of past winters are not subject to a time limit, and we continue to receive them daily, it is not possible to state categorically that all will be made by the end of March 2001. It all depends on when people choose to make their claim.

34. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of men aged over 60 years will receive their winter fuel payments by March 2001. [136142]

Angela Eagle: For this winter, all automatic payments will be made before Christmas, as will those in respect of claims returned before 22 September 2000. Claims will still be processed if they are received after this date but payment before Christmas cannot be guaranteed. Claims for this winter's payments should be made before 31 March 2001. Because people who need to claim their payment this winter can do so up to the end of March 2001, it is not possible to estimate the percentage as requested.

For past winters, people must claim Winter Fuel Payments for each winter for which they think they may now be eligible. As at 6 November, the number of newly eligible men who have chosen to make a claim stands at around 950,000 and around 930,000 payments have already been issued in respect of successful claims. Because claims for past winters are not subject to any time limit, and we continue to receive them daily, it is not possible to estimate the percentage as requested.

Pensioners

26. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to increase the income of pensioners who have modest second pensions. [136133]

Mr. Rooker: The Pension Credit will increase the incomes of those with modest second pensions, by ensuring that these savings are rewarded.

We published our proposals for the Pension Credit last week.

29. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on poverty among pensioners living in rural areas. [136136]

Mr. Rooker: We know that many pensioners, including those living in rural areas, experience poverty. That is why we have a broad strategy, which includes raising the minimum income guarantee to £92.15 from next April, and an above earnings increase in the basic State pension.

33. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of those of pensionable age receive no pension other than their State Retirement Pension. [136141]

Mr. Rooker: Just over 60 per cent. of pensioner families receive an occupational or other private pension on top of their State Pension. The remaining 40 per cent. do not, but many of them receive other income instead. in 1998–99, single pensioners in this group had an average net income of £117 a week although the basic State Pension was only £64.70; the figures for couples are £206 and £103.40 respectively. The State Earnings Related Pension Scheme (SERPS) plays a role in increasing State Retirement Pension above the basic State Pension.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact on the standard of living of pensioners having awarded them an additional 75 pence per week. [136258]

Mr. Rooker: The increase in the basic State Retirement Pension in April 2000 was based on price inflation during the relevant period. The hon. Member will be aware that the living standard of the poorest pensioners was increased by raising the Minimum Income Guarantee by £3.45 for pensioners aged 60–75. However, pensioners will also receive a Winter Fuel Payment of £200 this year, which equates to just under £2 a week more than the previous year (when it was £100), and pensioners over age 75 will receive a free TV licence, which is worth a further £2 a week.

In addition, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has just announced a further package of measures for pensioners which, when taken together with changes already in place, will mean that next year, pensioner households will, on average, be £11 a week better off compared with 1997, with the poorest being at least £15 better off in real terms.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the amounts paid in benefits to pensioners are means tested. [136107]

Mr. Rooker: In 2000–01 an estimated 19 per cent. of benefits paid to pensioners were means tested. This compares with over 21 per cent. of benefits in 1996–97.

31. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received on pensioners' reactions to the Government's 75p per week pension increase. [136138]

Mr. Rooker: We have received numerous representations regarding pensions since the uprating statement in November 1999. These have come from pensioners, pensioner organisations, voluntary organisations and right hon. and hon. Members.

The Government have listened to these representations.

Savings

28. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the extent to which the benefit system provides an incentive to those on low incomes to save. [136135]

Mr. Bayley: We have introduced a number of measures that demonstrate our commitment to rewarding those people who have worked hard and saved hard.

These include the new State Second Pension, and stakeholder pensions will give many more people the opportunity to build a good second pension; increases in the capital limits for the Minimum Income Guarantee from next April—benefiting half a million pensioners by £5 a week, on average; and our proposals for the new Pension Credit, from 2003, will specifically reward saving with a cash addition—benefiting 5½ million pensioners.

Benefits Administration

32. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes he proposes to make to the administration method in housing and council tax benefit cases. [136139]

Angela Eagle: We have already introduced measures to bring about improvements in housing benefit administration. Since April, all local authorities have had to set challenging targets to secure year on year improvements in performance standards for housing benefit delivery. Our Housing Green Paper, published in April 2000, set out a range of further proposals for modernising the system. We are currently studying the responses and will announce our decisions shortly.

Pensions (Self-employed)

35. Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to provide pension schemes for self-employed people. [136143]

Mr. Rooker: Self-employed people can currently contribute to a personal pension. From April 2001 they will be able to contribute to a stakeholder pension scheme, which will provide a flexible and low cost pension option for them.

Pensioners (Rotherham)

37. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in Rotherham are eligible for (a) the winter fuel allowance, (b) a free television licence for over-75-year-olds and (c) the minimum income guarantee; and if he will make a statement. [136145]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Statistics on pensioners in Rotherham at May 2000

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137437]

Mr. Darling: The Department supports the aims of the International Year of Volunteers and is currently working jointly with other Government Departments on ways in which employee volunteering can be implemented.

I can confirm that it is my intention to volunteer during 2001.

Pensions Expenditure

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the percentage of national income accounted for by expenditure on National Insurance retirement pensions in each year from 1996–97 to 2001–02, taking account of the measures contained in Cm 4917; and if he will provide those estimates to two decimal places. [138231]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table which, for completeness, also shows expenditure on other benefits paid to pensioners. All figures are rounded to two decimal places; for this reason they may not appear to sum to the total, which is also correct to two decimal places.

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02

[3] Includes Income Support/Minimum Income Guarantee, Social Fund payments, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit paid to people aged 60 and over
[4] Includes non-contributory Retirement Pension and Christmas Bonus (contributory and non-contributory)

Income-related Benefits

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish his Department's next estimate of the take-up of income-related benefits. [136549]

Mr. Bayley: The next annual statistics on the take-up of income related benefits will be published on 8 December 2000. These will cover the financial year 1998–99, the latest period for which data are available. They will therefore predate the introduction of the Minimum Income Guarantee and Working Families Tax Credit.

Benefit Payment Methods

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the total savings from paying benefits and pensions directly into bank accounts instead of by cash payments at post offices. [136709]

Mr. Rooker: The move to automated credit transfer as the normal method of payment will provide a more modern, secure and efficient payment method and will bring significant savings anticipated to be in the region of £600 million per year. The move will begin in 2003, but full savings will not be realised until the system is phased in, when the transition from current paper-based methods of payment is complete.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients there are of the (a) mobility component and (b) care component of Disability Living Allowance, broken down by levels of benefit, at the most recent date for which figures are available, and in each of the three preceding years. [138220]

Mr. Bayley: The information requested is given in the table.

Recipients of Disability Living Allowance by component

Component	1997[1]	1998[1]	1999[1]	2000[1]
Care component
Higher rate	359,400	381,900	391,900	414,500

Benefit Fraud Inspectorate

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans his Department has to change the number of staff working at the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate. [135259]

Angela Eagle: The Benefit Fraud Inspectorate (BFI) has streamlined corporate support activities in line with the Department's drive to centralise support functions and focus resources on achieving results. Following these changes, there will be 112 staff working at the BFI, who will complete the programme of inspection activity as planned.

Mileage Allowance (Medical Examinations)

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to complete the review of the decision to reduce the mileage allowance for attending medical examinations. [135939]

Mr. Bayley: The review of mileage allowances is not yet complete. Recommendations to Ministers on this subject will need to take account of the implications of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's announcement of the intention to create a new Working Age Agency, combining the Benefits Agency's responsibilities for working age people with the Employment Service.

National Insurance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the impact on the level of the National Insurance Fund and on the rates of contributions in each year from 2001–02 to 2005–06 inclusive, of increasing the Basic Pension in each year by the percentage increase in the general level of earnings. [136051]

Mr. Rooker: This information is contained in the "Report by the Government Actuary on the Cost of Uprating the Basic Retirement Pension in line with the General Level of Earnings" Cm4920, which was laid before Parliament on 9 November 2000. Copies of the Report have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and the Report is available on the Internet at WWW.gad.vov.uk/publication.html.

Respite Care (Allowances)

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the basis for payment of allowances by his Department to a person receiving respite in (a) a private and (b) a local authority residential home. [136793]

Mr. Bayley: Entitlement to the income-related benefits for people in care homes depends on whether the person is admitted to a private or local authority home. The difference reflects the funding responsibilities between central and local government for the different types of home. Entitlement may also reflect any need for continuing payment of housing costs in respect of the person's own home during the period of respite care.

Where respite care is publicly funded, Attendance Allowance and the care component of Disability Living Allowance are not payable, to avoid duplication of provision, but no adjustment is generally made for the first 28 days. Where people pay for their own care these benefits are paid as normal.

Most other benefits are not affected by admission to care homes; though a person may have to pay the home for their respite care if privately arranged, or the local authority if that authority has arranged and funded the care.

Housing Benefit

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking to equalise the arrangements for paying Housing Benefit to council tenants with those for other tenants. [136812]

Angela Eagle: Council tenants are paid by rent rebate. This means their Housing Benefit is credited against their rent account held by the council. Those in the private sector are paid by rent allowance. Payment is made by various means, either to the tenant or, in prescribed circumstances, direct to the landlord. The question of how Housing Benefit is paid was visited in the Housing Green Paper. We are currently studying the consultation responses carefully and will take decisions on how to proceed in the light of them. We expect to announce our decisions in due course.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people aged 25 years and over had been receiving the Jobseeker's Allowance for more than two years in September 1997; and how many people aged 25 years and over have been receiving the jobseeker's allowance for more than two years currently. [137092]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Jobseeker's allowance claimants aged 25 and over where claim is two years or more, August 1997 and May 2000

Year	Number of claimants (thousand)
August 1997	265.0
May 2000	145.7

Notes:
1. It is not possible to provide figures for September 1997, I have therefore provided for the nearest point in time which is August 1997.
2. Figures have been rounded to the nearest hundred and quoted in thousands.
3. Figures based on claimants aged 25 years and over.
4. Figures based on duration of two years and over.
5. Based on 5 per cent. sample, therefore subject to sampling error.
6. Figures include all JSA cases who receive contribution-based and income-based benefit.
7. Claimants signing for National Insurance credits only are not included.

Government Actuary Report

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 30 October 2000, Official Report, column 254W, when he asked the Government Actuary to undertake a report into the basic state pension and different methods of uprating. [137301]

Mr. Rooker: Section 36 of the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Act 2000 requires the Government Actuary, or the Deputy Government Actuary, to report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on the cost of uprating the basic Retirement Pension in line with the general level of earnings. The Act received Royal Assent on 28 July 2000.

Anglo-Australian Social Security Agreement

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how the Government intends to respond to the termination of the Anglo-Australian Social Security Agreement; [137611]

(2) what estimate he has made of the effect on social security expenditure of the termination of the Anglo-Australian Social Security Agreement; [137612]

(3) how many people living in (a) Australia, (b) Britain and (c) elsewhere will be affected by the termination of the Anglo-Australian Social Security Agreement. [137614]

Mr. Rooker: People who are already receiving benefit with the help of the agreement when it terminates will not be affected. We are actively considering the full implications of Australia's decision and in particular what we can do to protect the position of those residing in the UK who have previously lived in Australia but not yet retired.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people living in Australia are earning credits towards British contributory benefits; [137613]

(2) how many people retired in each of the past five years with part of their pension coming from credits earned while in Australia; and what was the average amount of pension earned by these credits. [137610]

Mr. Rooker: People cannot earn credits while they are resident in Australia. Under the terms of the Social Security Agreement with Australia, when someone who is permanently resident in the United Kingdom claims Retirement Pension, previous residence in Australia can be treated as periods during which Class 3 contributions have been paid.

We estimate that an average of about 1,000 pensioners have benefited from these provisions each year during the last five years. The estimated average basic pension enhancement under the Agreement was around £15 a week over this period.

Earnings Link

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) of 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 575W, for how many years the National Insurance Fund will remain in surplus over and above the recommended surplus if the basic state pension was uprated in line with average earnings, contribution rates remained unchanged and contribution thresholds were uprated in line with the average earnings. [138046]

Mr. Rooker: The information is contained in Tables 4.2 and 5.2 of the "Report by the Government Actuary on the Cost of Uprating the Basic Retirement Pension in line with the General Level of Earnings" Cm 4920, which was laid before Parliament on 9 November 2000. Copies of the Report have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and the Report is available on the internet at www.gad.gov.uk/publication/publication.html.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Hi-tech Crime

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the resources available to the police in England and Wales to tackle hi-tech crime. [138264]

Mr. Straw: The Government are committed to action against hi-tech crime in line with our twin objectives of making the United Kingdom the best and the safest place in the world to conduct and engage in e-commerce.

I am therefore making £25 million available to the police in England and Wales over the next three years to initiate the implementation of a National Hi-Tech Crime Strategy to enhance the capability of law enforcement more effectively to investigate crime where new technology is used.

The funding being made available will give impetus to the process of developing the skills within the police to undertake computer network investigations and forensic examination of computer systems. These are skills that are becoming necessary as criminals identify opportunities to use and misuse information and communications technology. It is important to ensure that the police have the proper skills and equipment to support them in this new activity.

With those skills the police will, at the local level, be able to deliver improved service to the public to investigate reports of computer-related crime and to recover and analyse computer based evidence. The crimes concerned cover a wide spectrum from hacking and financial fraud to obscenity and the unlawful activities of paedophiles. The work of local units will be complemented by a multi-agency National Hi-Tech Crime Unit that will begin operation in April 2001. The national unit will provide advice and support to local units, and to other law enforcement agencies across the United Kingdom, and deal with the most serious and organised hi-tech crime offences, including those which have a transnational impact.

The Government's commitment to support the development of the capability of law enforcement was made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, when he endorsed the Cabinet Office Performance and Innovation Unit report, "e-commerce@its.best.uk", last summer. That report recommended that the Government improve the technical capability of law enforcement to investigate internet crime and establish an Internet Crime Unit.

On 11 September the Prime Minister published the UKOnline Annual Report. The establishment of a National Hi-Tech Crime Unit was identified as a specific action, part of the Government's commitment to work with industry to ensure a safe and secure environment for e-commerce and to help people trust the internet.

I am pleased that with the support of the Association of Chief Police Officers, the National Criminal Intelligence Service and the National Crime Squad, we are able to make progress towards ensuring that the police both locally and nationally are better trained and equipped to deal with hi-tech crime.

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137430]

Mr. Straw: The Government fully support the aims of the International Year of Volunteers. The Home Office is contributing £300,000 towards the costs of the International Year of Volunteers English Consortium to cover salaries and other core costs. We would also like to see all employers give their employees a day's paid time off to work in the community. The Home Office has a policy of allowing staff special leave each year to do voluntary work. I intend to spend a day volunteering during 2001.

Anti-social Behaviour Orders

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the average cost is of issuing anti-social behaviour orders; [137599]

(2) how many anti-social behaviour orders have been issued since April 1999 in (a) England and Wales, (b) the Greater London area and (c) the Royal borough of Kingston. [137598]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Over 100 anti-social behaviour orders have been issued since the measure was implemented on 1 April 1999. At least 30 of these have been made in the Greater London area, but, as far as I am aware, none has been made in the Royal borough of Kingston.

I cannot yet say what the average cost of issuing an order is. We will be undertaking a review into the operation and effectiveness of anti-social behaviour orders in the New Year. Once the results of the review have been published, we should have a clearer picture of the cost of seeking an order.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons registered social landlords do not have the power to apply direct to the courts for anti-social behaviour orders; and if he will assess the benefits of giving such a power to those registered social landlords who have acquired the housing stock of a local authority. [137059]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 recognised the key responsibility of the police and the local authority for tackling problems of crime and disorder on a local basis. The Act created the anti-social behaviour order as a powerful community-based measure to assist the police and local authorities in carrying out that responsibility and gave them the power to apply for such orders. The guidance we issued in June emphasises that registered social landlords should play a full and active part in any anti-social behaviour order case involving their tenants.

We have given a commitment to review the operation of anti-social behaviour orders within two years of implementation. The review will start in the new year and its findings and recommendations will be published. The review will cover the current procedures and channels for making an application. The review will specifically consider giving registered social landlords the power to apply for anti-social behaviour orders.

Stasi Agents

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provide an occupational breakdown of the British Stasi agents investigated since 1989; [137495]

(2) if the activities of the former Stasi spy controller in the United Kingdom, publicly identified in October, (a) have been, (b) are being or (c) will be investigated; [137494]

(3) if he will investigate the circumstances of the payment by the Stasi of sums to British Stasi agents between 1985 and 1989 in relation to discoveries made in October on which information has been supplied to him; and if those agents' identities have been discovered; [137493]

(4) what assessment he has made of the risks to the safety of defecting former FSB officers if they are returned to Russia. [137490]

Mr. Straw: I can add nothing to the reply that I gave the hon. Member about the East German Stasi on 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 610W, and 9 November 2000, Official Report, column 398W.

Human Rights Act 1998

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Human Rights Act 1998. [137620]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Human Rights Act 1998 received Royal Assent on 9 November 1998 and came into full effect on 2 October 2000. During that interval Whitehall Departments reviewed legislation, policy and procedures in the light of the Act's provisions and a range of training and awareness raising initiatives were undertaken for the judiciary and public authorities. The Human Rights Task Force played an important part in helping public authorities prepare for the Human Rights Act, issuing guidance and publicity materials and raising awareness of the Act among the general public. Financial provision has been made for dealing with challenges based on the Convention rights, especially in the initial period of operation.

Private Prisons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many certified prison custody officers are employed in each private prison in England and Wales. [137846]

Mr. Boateng: The number of prisoner custody officers at each privately managed prison is:

Privately managed prison	Number
Wolds	139
Blakenhurst	231
Doncaster	249
Parc	256
Altcourse	292
Lowdham Grange	117
Ashfield	134
Forest Bank	215

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost was of the contracts and competitions group within the Prison Service in each of the last three years. [137845]

Mr. Boateng: The costs requested are:

Year	£
1997–98	939,134
1998–99	1,122,844
1999–2000	1,379,395

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the Wilson report on the comparative costs of state and private prisons; and if he will make a statement. [137848]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary gave my hon. Friend the Member for Doncaster, Central (Ms Winterton) on 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 587W. The Wilson report is one of the two reviews referred to in that reply.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average cost is of a prison place in each contracted out prison. [137804]

Mr. Boateng: The cost of a prison place in each contracted out prison is:

Prison	£
Wolds	26,224
Blakenhurst	22,622
Doncaster	25,335
Parc	39,546
Altcourse	57,908
Lowdham Grange	30,160
Ashfield	39,120
Forest Bank	28,886

The figures represent costs at the end of September 2000 annualised over 2000–01. The average cost per place for the eight prisons is £33,725. The costs for Private Finance Initiative prisons include an element for the repayment of the capital financing charge.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sum Premier Prison Services has repaid to the Prison Service as a result of the refinancing of PFI schemes for HM Prisons (a) Lowdham Grange, (b) Ashfield, (c) Dovegate and (d) Hassockfield Secure Training Centre. [137798]

Mr. Boateng: Premier Prison Services Ltd. (PPS) has not refinanced its Private Finance Initiative (PFI) schemes. In late 1999 the holding companies of relevant PFI projects and their parent companies were restructured. This mechanical change did not alter the charges paid by the Prison Service or its lender liabilities in respect of Lowdham Grange, Ashfield or Dovegate prisons. The same applies to the Hassockfield Secure Training Centre which is a Home Office project.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much it has cost on average to build a prison place in each of the contracted out prisons. [137803]

Mr. Boateng: The capital cost for each Private Finance Initiative (PFI) prison place is:

Parc	53,750
Altcourse	105,000
Lowdham Grange	56,000
Ashfield	75,000
Forest Bank	62,500
Rye Hill	66,667
Dovegate	86,250

The average capital cost per place for the seven PFI prisons is £72,167.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many accredited offender programmes are running in each private prison in England and Wales. [137847]

Mr. Boateng: Blakenhurst, Doncaster and Forest Bank prisons each run one accredited cognitive behavioural programme—the Enhanced Thinking Skills programme. Wolds prison runs two, accredited programmes: the CALM (Controlling Anger and Learning to Manage It) programme and the Reasoning and Rehabilitation programme. Parc prison is due to introduce Reasoning and Rehabilitation later this financial year.

Rye Hill prison is due to introduce Reasoning and Rehabilitation later this financial year, and the Sex Offender Treatment Programme within the next financial year. Dovegate prison is due to introduce the Sex Offender Treatment Programme within the next financial year. Altcourse and Ashfield prisons do not run any accredited programmes at present.

Reoffenders

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the reoffending rates are within two years of completion of (a) one year probation orders without any conditions, (b) one year probation orders with conditions and (c) the pathfinder initiatives. [137849]

Mr. Boateng: Information on reoffending rates is not available.

However, the percentage of offenders who were reconvicted within two years of completing a one year probation order with no additional requirements which was made during the first quarter of 1996 was 54 per cent. The analogous rate for those on a one year probation order with additional requirements was 58 per cent.

There are no reconviction or reoffending rates available for the pathfinder initiatives, since they have not been running long enough to provide the necessary data. Arrangements are in place for the evaluation of the programmes, which will include the production of reconviction rates.

Firearms

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences involving firearms were recorded by (a) each police force in England and Wales and (b) in total in the year ending 31 March. [137739]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The requested data are not yet available.

The Verne Prison

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funding his Department provides for the evaluation of the Kainos programme at Her Majesty's Prison The Verne. [137717]

Mr. Boateng: None. The independent evaluation of the work of the Kainos programme in prisons is funded by the Kainos Community, and is guided by a steering group which includes representation from the Home Office Research and Statistics Directorate, the Prison Service and the Kainos Community.

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for the period between the commencement of the Home Detention Curfew scheme on 28 January 1999 and 30 September 2000, inclusive, (a) the total number of prisoners released on the scheme, (b) the number of prisoners convicted of each specific offence who were released on the scheme, with as detailed a breakdown as possible of the offences committed, including the specific offences committed by prisoners normally classified under the categories (i) other homicide and attempted homicide, (ii) other violence against the person, (iii) drug offences, (iv) assaults, and (v) other offences, including a breakdown of the prisoners normally classified in the sub-category of other offences called other offences, (c) the average sentence (1) received and (2) served, and the average period spent on the scheme, in respect of each specific offence, (d) the number of prisoners released on the scheme, with as detailed a breakdown as possible of the offences committed, who (A) breached the conditions of the curfew, (B) disappeared and were recaptured, (C) disappeared and remain unlawfully at large, and (D) had their licences revoked, and for what reasons, (e) as detailed a breakdown as possible of the specific offences committed by prisoners released on the scheme while on the scheme including all offences committed by prisoners who committed more than one offence and (f) as detailed a breakdown as possible of the specific offences committed by prisoners released on the scheme who committed a further offence while on the scheme that was similar in character to that for which they were originally convicted, including all offences committed by prisoners who committed more than one offence; and if he will make a statement. [134862]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 26 October 2000]: The information provided in my reply is for the period up to 30 September 2000. As of that date, a total of 26,609 prisoners had been placed on Home Detention Curfew since the scheme commenced on 28 January 1999.

The original offences committed by prisoners released under the scheme during the period, the number of prisoners convicted of each specific offence, the average sentence received and served for those offences, and the average period spent on the scheme in respect of prisoners convicted of each specific offence, are shown in Table 1. The data are taken from the Prison Service's inmate information system, based on the data recorded by each prison. The table provides as detailed a breakdown as is possible from central records.

As at 30 September, a total of 854 prisoners placed on the scheme had breached the conditions of their curfew. A breakdown of this number showing the original offences committed by those curfewees is shown in Table 2.

Information on curfewees whose licences are revoked and who disappear before being recaptured is not held centrally. However, information is held on the number of curfewees unlawfully at large at any one time. On 30 September there were 44 curfewees who remained unlawfully at large. This represents fewer than 4 per cent. of the total number of revocations.

Details of the offences committed by those 44 curfewees who remained unlawfully at large on 30 September 2000 can be found in Table 3.

As at 30 September 2000, 1,294 curfewees had their licences revoked, using the powers available to the Secretary of State under sections 38A(1) and 39 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991. The reasons for revocation were as follows:

breach of the curfew (section 38A(1)(a) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991)

the curfewee's whereabouts could no longer be electronically monitored (section 38A(1)(b) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991)

it was necessary to protect the public from serious harm (section 38A(1)(c) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991)

the curfewee had committed an offence or breached any other requirement of probation supervision (section 39 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991). Curfewees who are charged with a new offence may also be recalled on any of the preceding grounds depending upon the circumstances of the case.

Prisoners whose current sentence is in respect of an offence committed before 1 January 1999 are not liable to be recalled under section 39 of the Act. In such cases, where the curfewee has breached the requirements of probation supervision or where they have committed a further offence and it has not been possible to revoke their licence under section 38A of the Act, the breach may be referred to the courts under section 38(1) of the Act. The total number of such cases referred to the courts is not held centrally.

A breakdown of the original offences committed by the 1,294 recalled curfewees, together with a breakdown of the reasons for their recall, is at Table 4.

Table 5 gives a breakdown of the cases where a prisoner placed on Home Detention Curfew is known to have been convicted, cautioned in respect of an offence committed while on Home Detention Curfew, or where a prisoner is known to be pending prosecution for such an offence. Where a curfewee has been charged with more than one offence, these have been shown separately.

Table 6 gives a breakdown of cases involving prisoners placed on the scheme who are known to have been convicted, cautioned or have a prosecution pending in respect of an offence committed while on Home Detention Curfew which is similar in character to the index offence or offences for which they were originally convicted.

The scheme is designed to ensure a better transition for short term offenders between custody and the community. Prisoners are placed on Home Detention Curfew only after a careful risk assessment, and the safety of the public is paramount at all times.

Tables 1–6 have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals convicted of offences of domestic violence have been released under the Home Detention Curfew Scheme. [137813]

Mr. Boateng: Domestic violence is not a separate category of index offence. It would not be possible to provide this number, except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if individuals who have received custodial sentences for offences of domestic violence are eligible for release under the home detention curfew scheme. [137877]

Mr. Boateng: Domestic violence is not one of the statutory exclusions from eligibility from the Home Detention Curfew scheme. Providing a prisoner meets the general criteria for eligibility—that they have reached the age of 18 and are serving a sentence over three months but less than four years—they are eligible for consideration for the scheme.

All prisoners considered for the scheme are assessed specifically in relation to the potential risk, to the victim or to other members of the public, posed by their release. Prisoners who present a clear and immediate threat to either the victim or the public will not be released on the scheme.

Corporate Killing

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many responses to the consultation on involuntary manslaughter were received from (a) hon. Members, (b) trade unions, (c) employers organisations and (d) members of the public; in each case, how many (i) broadly supported and (ii) broadly opposed the creation of a new offence of corporate killing; and if he will make a statement. [136937]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We received 166 responses to the consultation paper we published in May this year. Of these, 11 were from hon. Members, five from employers associations, three from trade unions and 27 from members of the public. The remainder were contributions from individual undertakings, pressure groups, other representative bodies, lawyers and other Government Departments.

Of these, five hon. Members broadly supported the creation of an offence of corporate killing. The other six confined their comments to the reform of the individual offence. Four of the employers associations indicated their broad support; one was opposed to the creation of a new offence. All trade unions that responded were in support of an offence of corporate killing. Of the members of the public who contributed to the consultation, all who commented on corporate killing were in broad support of the proposals.

We are now carefully considering all responses and will publish a digest of them in due course.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his most recent estimate is of the level of crime per 1,000 of population in (a) rural and (b) urban areas; and which category of crime is commonest in (i) rural and (ii) urban areas. [136832]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Estimates of the number of crimes per 1,000 population in rural and urban areas can be derived from the 2000 British Crime Survey (BCS). The 2000 BCS interviewed a core random sample of 19,411 adults (those aged 16 and over) living in private households in England and Wales about their experience of crime during 1999.

There is no commonly agreed definition of rural areas. The definition of rural areas used in the BCS is based on those parts of England and Wales falling within A Classification of Residential Neighbourhoods (ACORN) categories 1 to 9, and 27. These categories were developed by CACI Ltd. and classify areas according to the demographic, employment and housing characteristics. They account for an estimated 24 per cent. of the adult population in 1999. Estimated crime rates per 1,000 population are given in table 1. BCS data have been used in this answer, rather than recorded crime data, owing to the better division of rural and urban areas in the BCS.

Table 1: Estimated number of crimes per 1,000 population[1] in England and Wales in 1999

	Number
Non-rural	390
All	350

[1] Based on results from the 2000 British Crime Survey. Estimates of adults per household, based on figures supplied by CACI Ltd., have been used in forming these estimates. In both urban and rural areas the estimated average number of adults per household is two in rural areas and 1.9 in non-rural areas.

Full details of the offences covered by the British Crime Survey are given in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 18/00, which has been deposited in the Library.

Vandalism and vehicle-related thefts are the most common types of offences against households in both rural and urban areas, according to the BCS. The most common type of crime against the person is common assault, again in both areas. These are assaults in which there is either no injury or at most minimal injury.

The incident rates for these crimes are shown in table 2. For household crimes, rates are quoted per 1,000 households.

Table 2: Incident rates for most common crimes per 1,000 population or households[1]

	Non-rural	Rural	All
Personal crimes
Incident rates per 1,000 adults
Common assault	58	35	53
Household crimes
Incident rates per 1,000 households
All motor vehicle-related thefts[2]	143	109	135
Vandalism[3]	145	84	130

[1] Based on results from the 2000 British Crime Survey.
[2] Include theft of or from motor vehicles, including attempts.
[3] Vandalism of motor vehicles is included within vandalism.

Huntingdon Life Sciences

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the licence of Huntingdon Life Sciences. [137071]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have no plans to do so.

Police Station Closures

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police stations have closed down in (a) England and (b) Wales in each of the last 10 years in areas defined as rural and areas defined as urban. [136720]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 6 November 2000]: Estimates by police forces of the number of police stations opened or closed in England and Wales between 31 March 1990 and 31 March 2000 are set out in the table. Overall, it is estimated that 309 new stations have been opened and 939 closed.

Year end	Opened	Closed	Number change	Total stations open
March
1990	—	—	—	2,729
1991	35	−47	−12	2,717
1992	14	−49	−35	2,682
1993	29	−124	−95	2,587
1994	32	−145	−113	2,474
1995	30	−120	−90	2,384
1996	31	−68	−37	2,347
1997	42	−95	−53	2,294
1998	33	−96	−63	2,231
1999	44	−90	−46	2,185
2000	19	−105	−86	2,099
Total changes	309	−939	−630	—

A table of figures by force area has been placed in the Library. (There is no formal definition of "rural" or "urban" forces).

The force-by-force analysis suggests significant variations in force policy in relation to police stations. The figures reflect the changing pattern of policing as Chief Constables and Police Authorities have responded to changing patterns of demand for services and have sought improved efficiency and effectiveness in service delivery.

Many police premises which have been closed or replaced will have deteriorated or have been inadequate for the demands of modern policing. Many will have become little used by the public. The Audit Commission report, "Action Stations—Improving the Management of the Police Estate" (1999) makes a strong case for further rationalisation of the police estate.

I do, however, understand the concern of those who live in areas which have lost a permanent policing presence. Accordingly, I am discussing, with the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Association of Police Authorities, how each police authority might better inform the public about the steps it is taking to maintain and improve police visibility and effectiveness in all parts of England and Wales.

CCTV

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research the Government have undertaken into the effect of CCTV in towns on crime levels in neighbouring rural areas. [136679]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 6 November 2000]: Police operational experience and various research studies show that Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) has significant crime reduction and detection potential, particularly when used as part of a wider strategy. As with any crime reduction measure, there is a possibility of some displacement, but this is by no means inevitable. Schemes funded under the Crime Reduction Programme CCTV Initiative will be evaluated to build up the knowledge base of what works best in what context. The evaluations will address the issue of displacement.

The deadline for receipt of outline applications for funding under the second round of the £153 million CCTV Initiative has been brought forward to 22 December 2000. The application prospectus for the second round was issued in march 2000. It was amended from the first round to give increased emphasis to bids aimed at reducing crime and the fear of crime in rural areas and small community shopping centres where absolute crime levels may be lower, but fear of crime is having a significant adverse effect on local communities.

A copy of the application prospectus is available on our website: www.crimereduction.gov.uk.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what data he has collated for the Ealing division of the Metropolitan police of the number of ethnic minority officers and civilian staff in each of the past five years and the number of complaints and employment claims of unfair treatment made by ethnic minority staff. [137206]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested has been provided by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and is shown in the table:

Police officers from ethnic minority groups	59	69	67	80	80
Civilian staff from ethnic minority groups	50	54	60	64	63
Grievances instigated by ethnic minority staff	0	[1] 1	0	0	2
Employment tribunals instigated by ethnic minority staff	0	0	1	0	3

[1] This grievance relates to a member of the civilian staff at Ealing who raised the issue of an incident that occurred in another division in the Metropolitan police

Mr. Nick Tucker

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Criminal Cases Review Commission to report on the case of Mr. Nick Tucker. [137040]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I understand that an application for review of Nicholas Tucker's case was submitted to the Criminal Cases Review Commission in January 1999. The Commission has determined that the case will require an extensive review. Mr. Tucker's representatives have recently asked that his application should be given priority. The Commission will consider this request and let Mr. Tucker's representatives know the outcome. If the Commission found that there were no special factors that would justify giving it priority, Mr. Tucker's application would continue to await allocation to a caseworker, on the basis of date order of receipt, and the Commission would expect to begin the review by May 2001.

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the case of Mr. Nick Tucker; and if he will make a statement. [137043]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I have received various representations from Mr. Tucker's parents, from hon. Members, and from members of the public.

Entry Clearance

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many EU nationals were refused entry to the UK on grounds of (a) public policy, (b) public security and (c) public health during 1999. [137278]

Mrs. Roche: The available information relates to the total number of European Union nationals who were refused leave to enter in 1999. A total of 290 such persons were recorded in that year. There are no separate statistics for the individual categories requested.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many non-EEA family members who arrived in possession of entry clearance holding an EEA family permit were refused entry by the immigration officer at a British port of entry during 1999. [137277]

Mrs. Roche: I regret the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Former FSB Officers

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the requests for political asylum made by former FSB officers. [137489]

Mr. Straw: All asylum applications are fully and carefully considered on their individual merits, by specially trained officers in the Integrated Casework Directorate of the Home Office. Details of individual cases are not disclosed to third parties for reasons of confidentiality.

Lieutenant-Colonel Litvinenko

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if former Lieutenant-Colonel Litvinenko (a) has been, (b) is being or (c) will be debriefed on security issues; [137492]

(2) what guidance his Department has given to journalists in respect of the defection of former Lieutenant-Colonel Litvinenko. [137491]

Mr. Straw: It has been the long-standing policy of successive Governments not to comment on issues of national security. It is also an important principle that we do not ordinarily discuss an individual's immigration status. This has been explained to journalists by my Department's Press Office.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases are held in the Work in Progress Store of the Immigration and Nationality Department; and how many of these have been outstanding for (a) between six months and one year, (b) between one and two years and (c) more than two years. [136923]

Mrs. Roche: As at 3 November, there were 67,018 cases held in the Work in Progress Store. Of these, 6,022 have been outstanding for between six months and one year and 27,483 have been outstanding for between one and two years. The Work in Progress Store was set up at the end of 1998 and no cases have therefore been outstanding in the store for more than two years.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what proportion of asylum applicants since April have chosen to refuse the offer of accommodation in dispersal areas. [136791]

Mrs. Roche: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum cases have been dispersed under the terms of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999; and how many of these were (a) single adults and (b) couples without children. [136922]

Mrs. Roche: As at the end of October 2000, 5,600[1] asylum cases (not including dependants) were confirmed as having arrived in the accommodation allocated to them under the dispersal scheme. Of these, 4,600[1] were single adult asylum seekers, and 300[1] were adult asylum seekers with one dependant. Cases where there is only one dependant are not necessarily couples without children.

[1] Figures rounded to the nearest 100.

Private Psychiatric Hospitals (Prisoners)

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted prisoners were transferred to private psychiatric hospitals in each of the last five years. [137289]

Mr. Boateng: The latest available information on the number of convicted prisoners transferred to private psychiatric hospitals under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 between 1995 to 1999 is as follows:

Number of convicted prisoners transferred to the care of private psychiatric hospitals, 1995 to 1999

	Transfers[1] to private psychiatric hospitals	Total number of transfers[1]	Proportion transferred to private psychiatric hospitals (%)
1995	12	254	4.7
1999	22	276	8.0

[1] Transfers from Prison Service Establishments under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 including those subject to restrictions under section 49.

Residence Permits

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) passports and (b) identity documents purported to be issued by an EU member state presented by passengers on arrival in the UK were the subject of inquiries with the authorities of the member state to determine the document's genuineness, and whether issue to the holder was correct, during 1999. [137290]

Mrs. Roche: Statistics are not currently compiled for the number of inquiries made with other European Union/ European Economic Area (EU/EEA) member states regarding documents issued by them. The Immigration Service National Forgery Section is the nominated United Kingdom contact point for EU/EEA travel document inquiries. Other Immigration Service offices, however, also make certain unilateral inquiries directly with EU member states via established bilateral liaison contacts. Reference is normally made to these authorities only in a restricted number of cases; for instance, when it cannot be determined that the document is a forgery, or to clarify whether or not a document is a stolen blank whose details have not already been circulated via the nominated national contact point. A new system of recording details of the mutual exchange of such information is currently being put in place.

Comprehensive figures are, however, available for the number of cases of fraudulent passports and identity cards detected by the Immigration Service at United Kingdom ports of arrival during the course of 1999. There were 5,516 such detections, 3,018 of which were non-British EEA documents.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Council if she will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137435]

Mrs. Beckett: I fully support the aims of the International Year of Volunteers. I intend to take part in a voluntary activity during 2001.

The Privy Council Office fully supports the role that employers can play in the voluntary sector. A statement was made to all staff in June of this year confirming the Department's commitment to Volunteer Day and encouraging staff to become involved.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the average period of time taken to settle claims dealt with by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority in each of the last three years. [135334]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I have been asked to reply.

There are no meaningful average times applicable to claims for criminal injuries compensation. Applications range from the very straightforward ones in which a decision may be issued within a few weeks, through to exceptionally complicated cases in which it may take a number of years for the injury to be fully assessed.

The Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority has, however, been able to provide some information about the percentage of cases settled within various time frames under both the current (tariff) scheme and the former (common law damages) scheme. This is summarised in the table.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) in each of the last 10 years, how many Queen's Counsel there were, broken down by (a) regional circuit and (b) field of practice; [137332]

(2) in each of the last 10 years, how many Queen's Counsel there were in England and Wales; and how many were appointed each year; [137333]

(3) in each of the last 10 years, how many Queen's Counsel were appointed by (a) regional circuit and (b) field of practice. [137334]

Mr. Lock: The information requested on the number of Queen's Counsel appointed is set out in the table:

Year	Total in silk	Number appointed each year
2000	1,072	78
1999	1,043	69
1998	1,006	60

1994	845	77
1993	797	70
1991	736	73

Information relating to the number of Queen's Counsel in practice was provided by the General Council of the Bar. They are unable to provide details regarding the Circuit or the field of practice of Queen's Counsel.

The information regarding Queen's Counsel appointed in the last five years by a) circuit and b) field of practice is listed below. Information before 1996 is not available.

Barristers and Solicitors

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in each of the last 10 years, how many (a) barristers qualified to practise in court and (b) solicitors there were. [137341]

Mr. Lock: My Department does not record the information requested but has obtained it from the Bar Council and the Law Society. The number of (a) barristers, who may practise in all courts, and (b) solicitors, who may practise in the lower courts, and (c) the number of solicitors with rights of audience in the higher courts, in each of the last 10 years, is as follows:

	(a) Barristers in independent practice	(b) Solicitors holding practising certificates	(c) Solicitors granted rights of audience in the higher courts each of the years specified
1991	6,901	57,167	—
1992	7,271	59,566	—

1997	9,369	71,637	101
1998	9,698	75,072	202
1999	9,932	79,503	200

Note:

The figures for solicitors with higher rights of audience (column c) relate to the number granted rights in each year. The figures are not cumulative as in the preceding columns.

Magistrates Courts Committees

Mr. Gill: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what funding his Department provides for magistrates courts committees. [137571]

Jane Kennedy: The Lord Chancellor's Department provides separate grants for revenue and capital (buildings and IT) to local authorities for magistrates courts costs.

Revenue grant is paid at 80 per cent. of expenditure, with the remaining 20 per cent. met by local authorities. In 1999–2000 £329.2 million of grant was provided.

Capital grant is paid at 80 per cent. of the costs of the scheme or item, with the remainder met by local authorities. In 1999–2000, £26.4 million was paid (£16 million for buildings and £10.4 million for IT).

Court Houses (Human Rights Act)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what additional funding he proposes to make available to magistrates courts committees to enable them to make court houses compliant with the provision of the Human Rights Act 1998. [137570]

Jane Kennedy: The Department makes capital resources available for work on court houses and it is open to magistrates courts committees and their paying authorities to apply for such funding in order to make court houses compliant with the Human Rights Act 1998.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received from magistrates courts committees regarding the impact of the Human Rights Act 1998 upon court houses. [137569]

Jane Kennedy: We have received representations from one magistrates courts committee on the impact of the Human Rights Act upon court houses. A further 13 letters have been received from hon. Members, local authorities and solicitors. The Department has also received a number of requests for funding assistance in 2001–02 to improve facilities in court houses.

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Lord Chancellor will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137432]

Mr. Lock: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, Official Report, column 531W.

The Lord Chancellor fully supports the aims of the International Year of Volunteers. Everyone benefits from volunteering and the Prime Minister has issued a challenge to employers to give their employees paid time off to work in the community. From 1 August 2000 staff of the Lord Chancellor's Department and its executive agency, the Court Service, may take an additional day's paid leave for unspecified general voluntary work. The Lord Chancellor is himself considering possible voluntary activities during 2001.

Fine Revenues

Mr. Green: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much revenue was raised from fines following convictions for (a) littering and (b) abandoning a vehicle in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999. [137376]

Jane Kennedy: The collection of fines is the responsibility of the magistrates courts. Figures at this level of detail are not held centrally and could be obtained from individual courts only at disproportionate cost.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many mortgage repossessions there were in England and Wales in each of the past 15 years. [137729]

Jane Kennedy: Information on the number of mortgage possession actions entered and orders made in England and Wales in each of the past 10 years is available and is set out in the table. Information on numbers before 1990 is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Year	Number of actions issued	Number of orders made
1990	145,350	54,718
1991	186,649	73,859
1992	142,162	58,654
1993	116,181	43,017
1994	87,958	32,137
1995	84,170	30,535
1996	79,791	27,777
1997	67,073	22,524
1998	79,637	23,002
1999	82,623	23,590

Note:
Not all orders made result in repossession. Parties are still at liberty to negotiate a settlement.

Judicial Trustees

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many trusts are administered by judicial trustees under the Judicial Trustees Act 1896. [137843]

Jane Kennedy: The Official Solicitor is currently administering 81 cases and the Public Trustee is currently administering three cases under the Judicial Trustees Act 1896 (the Act). Solicitors, accountants, or any other competent person can be appointed as Trustee by the Chancery Division of the High Court and that office has record of an additional current 25 cases. This produces a total of 109 cases currently being administered under the Act.

Civil Servants (Relocation)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which relocation companies hold contracts with his Department for the relocation of civil servants; when the contracts were last renewed; where the contracts were advertised; and what the length and value of each contract is. [137197]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor's Department does not hold contracts with any companies for the relocation of civil servants, and has not done so in the past.

CABINET OFFICE

Departmental Employees (New Deal)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many staff her Department employs under the New Deal for Young People. [137958]

Mr. Stringer: As at 1 October 2000, the information on all Civil Service departments (including their agencies) participating as employers in the New Deal is as follows:

New Deal starts as at 1 October 2000

Ministerial Fleet (Petrol Costs)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what was the cost for each of the past three years of petrol for the Downing street fleet of cars; and how many vehicles are in that fleet. [135008]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Government Car and Despatch Agency. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. Nick Matheson, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Nick Matheson to Dr. Julian Lewis, dated 13 October 2000:

The Minister of State, Cabinet Office, has asked me in my capacity as the Chief Executive responsible for the Government Car and Despatch Agency to reply to your Parliamentary Questions about the number of ministerial vehicles provided to various government departments and the associated petrol costs.

The figures are as follows:

Department	Number of ministerial cars	Petrol costs (excluding VAT) from 1 April to 30 September 2000 (£)
Cabinet Office, including No. 10 Downing street	[1]7	6,231
Department of Culture Media and Sport	4	4,027
Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions	8	5,551
Department for Education and Employment	8	7,812
Department for Trade and Industry	5	3,158
Department of Health	6	5,904
HM Treasury	5	5,441
Home Office	4	4,520

[1] Including reserve cars for Prime Minister

Figures for earlier years are not readily available and are in archived format. These can only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137422]

Marjorie Mowlam: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Office, Official Report, column 531W.

Cabinet Office rules allow paid time off to undertake activities in all areas of volunteer work, for example as a magistrate or school governor, helping out at a local old people's home or assisting with an adult literacy scheme.

I attach a great deal of importance to the benefits which voluntary work brings to both the individual and the organisation. Along with a number of staff in my Department, I will be undertaking a day of voluntary activity next year to mark the International Year of Volunteers. I intend to do so by spending the day with disabled people.

TREASURY

English Parishes

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of English parishes do not contain settlements of 2,000 or more. [136497]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 6 November 2000]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Tim Yeo, dated 13 November 2000:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question on percentages of English parishes which do not contain settlements of 2,000 or more. (136497)

There is no information on the populations of settlements within Civil Parishes in England. However, from the 1991 Census, some 8,378 parishes (82 per cent. of all parishes (10,269) in England) had total populations of under 2,000 residents.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual cost of the climate change levy to the clothing and textile industry. [135564]

Mr. Timms: The impact of the levy will depend on a number of factors, including: the future energy consumption by firms; the level of employment in those firms; the number of firms that are eligible to receive a discount on the main rates of the levy by signing up to an energy efficiency agreement; what use they make of electricity generated from "new" renewable sources of energy and in "good quality" combined heat and power plants; and the extent to which they take advantage of the proposed introduction of a system of enhanced capital allowances for energy saving investments.

Petrol

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the extent to which differential tax rates account for the different cost to the motorist of unleaded petrol and lead replacement petrol. [134965]

Mr. Timms: The current difference in the tax rates for unleaded and lead replacement petrol accounts for 2.43 pence per litre (excise duty plus associated VAT). However, as announced in the PBR, subject to consultation on the environmental implications, the duty premium will be removed in Budget 2000.

Retail price of fuel reflects the influence of a number of variable commercial and economic factors apart from duty.

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the contribution made to GDP by voluntary workers in the last financial year for which figures are available. [136068]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 6 November 2000]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 13 November 2000:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the contribution made to Gross Domestic Product (GDP) by voluntary workers. (136068)

The contribution of voluntary workers to GDP is included in the National Accounts where the output of the organisations they work for is estimated as part of market activity. For example, the output of a charity shop, which may be staffed by unpaid volunteers, will be included in the output of retailers, and any profit the shop generates will appear in the income estimate of GDP. However, it is not possible to identify separately where this output that contributes to GDP has been produced by voluntary workers.

The System of National Accounts (SNA) makes provision for information on unpaid work to be compiled in a satellite account. The Office for National Statistics (ONS) is currently developing a Household Satellite Account, which will include, amongst other things, an estimate of the volume and value of voluntary work. It is expected that this will be published at the end of 2001.

Bank Lending

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to Cm 4917, what powers he has to compel banks to disclose their individual lending activities to businesses in under-invested areas. [138243]

Miss Melanie Johnson: None.

ISAs

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many investors have opened ISA accounts who did not previously hold a PEP or TESSA; [138245]

(2) how much money has been invested in ISA accounts by investors who previously did not hold a PEP or TESSA. [138258]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I regret that information based on analysis of administrative data held by the Inland Revenue is not yet available.

Euratom Safeguards Agency

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the total annual budget and (b) Her Majesty's Government's annual contribution to the Euratom Safeguards Agency in each of the last five years; and what are the estimated figures for each of the next five years. [137693]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This information is contained in the Adopted EC budget for 2000, copies of which have been deposited in the House of Commons Library.

The UK makes its contributions to the EC Budget as a whole and not to specific sections.

Single Currency

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 537W, what constitutional factors were considered in relation to possible British membership of the single European currency, prior to the 27 October 1997 statement concerning British membership of EMU. [138008]

Miss Melanie Johnson: As the October 1997 statement stated, if the economic benefits are clear and unambiguous, there is no constitutional bar to British membership of EMU.

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which responsibilities for assessing if membership of the single European currency would be in Britain's economic interest lie with (a) his Department and (b) the Bank of England. [135859]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Treasury will make another assessment of the five economic tests early in the next Parliament.

Internet (Price Transparency)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what studies his Department has undertaken on the competition effects of increased price transparency due to use of the internet; and if he will make a statement. [137330]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government believe that the internet and e-commerce are generally beneficial to competition. They increase the range of suppliers for many products and services. Price transparency is just one aspect. HM Treasury has not conducted studies on the competition effects of increased price transparency.

Petrol Costs (Ministerial Cars)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the cost was in each of the past three years for petrol for his Department's fleet of ministerial cars; and how many vehicles there are in that fleet. [134966]

Miss Melanie Johnson: All Treasury ministerial cars are provided under a lease contract with the Government Car and Despatch Agency.

HEALTH

Cancer Services

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the impact of the Comprehensive Spending Review on (a) cancer research, (b) cancer screening and (c) palliative care of cancer patients. [133844]

Yvette Cooper: The National Health Service Plan announced that a substantial increase in funding has been secured for the NHS. As a result cancer services will receive an additional £280 million in 2001–02, £407 million in 2002–03 and £570 million by 2003–04. This will be used to support the implementation of the NHS Cancer Plan, published on 27 September 2000. The plan sets out action to improve the speed, quality and equity of cancer services, and builds on the far-reaching changes for health services set out in the NHS Plan. Specifically resources have been identified for:

Cancer research—by 2003 we will be investing an additional £20 million each year in the infrastructure for cancer research and an extra £4 million on prostate cancer research. Basic and medical research, including cancer, will also benefit with £250 million being made available to the research councils for new research activity, particularly in genomics, e-science and basic technology.

Cancer screening—by 2004 routine invitations for breast screening will be extended to women aged 65 to 70, and the current service will be upgraded by offering two-view mammography at all screening rounds.

Palliative care of cancer patients—by 2004 the NHS will invest an extra £50 million to end inequalities in access to specialist palliative care and enable the NHS to make a realistic contribution to the cost hospices incur in providing agreed levels of service.

Further details are available in the NHS Cancer Plan, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Breastfeeding

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to encourage breastfeeding of babies. [134563]

Yvette Cooper: We are fully committed to the promotion of breastfeeding, which is uniformly accepted as the best form of nutrition for infants. We also firmly believe that it is important that women and their partners are able to make a fully informed choice on how to feed their babies based on accurate and consistent information. This means that women should have access to information about all infant feeding practices through the relevant health care professional to be confident about the choices they make.

The Infant Feeding Initiative was launched in May 1999 as part of our commitment to improve health inequalities. We have appointed two part-time National Infant Feeding Advisers to act as a focus for developing and implementing strategies for promoting breastfeeding. In particular, their expertise is being utilised to increase the incidence of breastfeeding among groups where breastfeeding rates are lowest, for example, those on low income, and to ensure that all mothers have the information and support they need to make informed infant feeding choices.

We have established the National Network of Breastfeeding Co-ordinators to promote breastfeeding at a local level and to share ideas nationally with a view to increasing both the number of mothers breastfeeding and the length of time they continue to breastfeed. Each year the four United Kingdom Health Departments support National Breastfeeding Awareness Week to increase public awareness of the benefits of breastfeeding, which took place this year from 14–20 May.

We also provide financial support to the four main voluntary organisations in this area, the National Childbirth Trust, La Leche League, Breastfeeding Network and the Association of Breastfeeding Mothers. Close links are also kept with UNICEF's Baby Friendly Initiative (UKBFI) which includes a departmental observer sitting on the Steering Committee of the UKBFI. We offer support for research into breastfeeding through the Quinquennial Surveys of Infant Feeding Practice; a new survey will be undertaken this year. Also, as part of the Department's research initiative on health inequalities, we are supporting a study aimed at identifying the barriers to breastfeeding in low income groups. The Department also receives and publishes expert advice on breastfeeding through its advisory committees.

Air Pollution

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the health costs of air pollution indicating the health problems of principal concern and the main source of the pollutants. [135392]

Yvette Cooper: The Department's Committee on the Medical Effect of Air Pollutants (COMEAP) published a report in 1998 on 'Quantification of the Health Effects of Air Pollution on Health in the United Kingdom'. The report was based on levels of pollutants in 1995. It estimated that the deaths of between 12,000 and 24,000 vulnerable people (mainly those with heart or lung disease) may be brought forward and between 14,000 and 24,000 respiratory hospital admissions and readmissions may be associated with short term exposure to air pollution each year. There was insufficient information to allow quantification of other health effects of air pollution.

The main pollutants of concern were particles and ozone. Particle levels have decreased since 1995 but there is no clear downward trend for ozone. The main sources of particles are primary particles from combustion sources (mainly road traffic), secondary particles, mainly sulphate and nitrate formed by chemical reactions in the atmosphere and coarse particles such as dust and biological particles. Ozone arises from chemical reactions of pollutants in the atmosphere in the presence of sunlight. The precursor pollutants include nitrogen oxides and volatile organic compounds form traffic and industry.

The Department's Ad-Hoc Group on the Economic Appraisal of the Health Effects of Air Pollution estimated that the average cost to the NHS of a respiratory hospital admission was about £1,390[1].

Hepatitis C

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if needle exchange facilities for injecting drug users are monitored with a view to prevention of hepatitis C infection. [135519]

Yvette Cooper: By discouraging sharing of syringes and promoting safer injecting practice, needle exchanges contribute to minimising the spread of blood-borne diseases including hepatitis C.

Needle exchange facilities are generally provided directly through the National Health Service or through voluntary sector agencies under agreement with health authorities, or through community pharmacies. They are subject to the normal monitoring arrangements exercised by health authorities.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken to prevent hepatitis C infection in injecting drug users. [135520]

Yvette Cooper: We recognise the prevalence of hepatitis C among injecting drug misusers is high, and, in the industrialised world, most transmission of hepatitis C now occurs via injecting drug use.

Measures to prevent the spread of hepatitis C among drug users include needle exchange facilities, the prescription of oral substitute medication, and health promotion literature.

The Department published revised "Drug Misuse and Dependence—Guidelines on Clinical Management" last April and sent these to all doctors. The guidelines include advice on blood-borne diseases and on injecting drug use.

During 2000–01 it is planned that guidance for professionals will be published, expanding on the information in the Department's clinical guidelines. Regional seminars are to be held for professionals to raise awareness of the guidance, and increase skills in delivering prevention messages.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken to combat hepatitis C within the prison population. [135884]

Yvette Cooper: The Prison Service has a strategy for preventing the spread of hepatitis C, and other communicable diseases, in prisons. This includes training for staff, education and information for prisoners and measures to reduce the risk of transmission. Where clinically indicated, a prisoner who has tested positive for hepatitis C would be referred to a National Health Service specialist for expert advice on the clinical management of the case.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to combat the spread of hepatitis C; and if he will make a statement. [135517]

Yvette Cooper: The Department is continuing to raise awareness of hepatitis C by working with the voluntary sector and others to provide information and advice for the general public and for those groups most at risk, specifically injecting drug users.

Hepatitis C is spread primarily by contact with the blood of an infected person, and injecting drug users are at increased risk of infection. In this country, there is a robust approach to harm minimisation that includes widespread needle exchange schemes and substitute prescribing, both of which encourage people not to inject and not to share injecting drug equipment. We are currently improving the effectiveness and efficiency of these programmes through shared care schemes. Guidance on hepatitis C and strategies to minimise transmission is being developed and will be backed up by regionally based workshops and seminars.

The risk of transmission of hepatitis C via blood donations has been virtually eliminated by the screening of blood donors for antibodies to hepatitis C virus and the treatment of blood products. Organs and tissues for donation are also screened for hepatitis C. The risk of hepatitis C transmission in the clinical setting is minimised by adhering to universal infection control procedures. To emphasise this, guidance has been issued to the National Health Service on minimising the risk of occupationally acquired hepatitis C for health care workers. Guidance on the prevention and control of blood-borne virus infection in renal dialysis units, which includes advice on hepatitis C, is currently being finalised. The Advisory Group on Hepatitis C is currently reviewing its advice on hepatitis C infected health care workers.

The Department is currently considering how to strengthen and develop prevention and surveillance.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the occurrence of hepatitis C in the UK population over the period 1995 to 2000. [135886]

Yvette Cooper: Current information suggests that the prevalence (current level) of chronic carriage of hepatitis C may be around 0.5 per cent. of the general population. The incidence (new infection) of hepatitis C is not known as the virus is usually acquired without symptoms. Data from surveillance of antibody positive hepatitis C laboratory reports in the United Kingdom during the period 1995–99 are set out in the table. These laboratory reports do not distinguish between new and chronic infections, and reflect current laboratory testing patterns. They do not take into account under-reporting and under-ascertainment of cases.

Number of laboratory reports of hepatitis C infection

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the availability of harm reduction facilities, with special reference to needle exchange, in the last five years; and what assessment he has made of the effects of needle exchange facilities on the prevalence of hepatitis C among injecting drug users. [135518]

Yvette Cooper: Our anti-drugs strategy is clear about the benefits of a policy that discourages drug use but also recognises that some people may still use illegal drugs. It is important to minimise the health risks and harm for those who do so.

Data from the drug action team template returns for 1999–2000 show a combined total of 322 statutory and voluntary sector providers of needle exchange services. The directory "Drug Problems: where to get help", published by the voluntary sector organisation Drugscope, lists 124 voluntary and statutory agencies which provide needle exchange facilities for injecting drug misusers. These data are not comparable due to their different methods of collection.

Other measures to minimise the spread of hepatitis C among drug misusers include the prescription of oral substitute medication, and health promotion literature. Guidance on harm reduction for injecting drug misusers, and current carriers of hepatitis C, are included in the Department's clinical guidelines "Drug Misuse and Dependence—Guidelines on Clinical Management", which were published last year and sent to all doctors.

We recognise the very important role played by needle exchange facilities in helping to prevent the spread of blood-borne diseases, particularly among people who might not otherwise engage with services. It is generally acknowledged that the introduction of needle exchanges have been instrumental in averting an HIV epidemic among drug misusers. The latest report by the European Monitoring Centre for Drugs and Drug Addiction shows that the United Kingdom has the lowest rate of hepatitis C prevalence in the European Union.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to attempt to identify the hepatitis C population in the United Kingdom. [135888]

Yvette Cooper: The Department will continue to raise awareness of hepatitis C by working with the voluntary sector and others to provide information and advice for the general public and for those groups most at risk, specifically injecting drug users.

Those who have been at risk of exposure to hepatitis C and who seek testing in the National Health Service should be offered well-informed advice and made aware of the implications of a positive test. Those who test positive will be referred to a specialist for confirmatory testing, further assessment and treatment, if appropriate.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will implement a plan for London similar to that established by the Greater Glasgow Health Board to combat hepatitis C infection. [135889]

Yvette Cooper: Our approach to hepatitis C is to develop a strategic national programme which involves co-ordination in areas such as public health work on prevention and surveillance; tackling drug misuse; prison healthcare; research; commissioning healthcare services and implementing the recommendations of the National Institute of Clinical Excellence.

Health authorities in London are best placed to judge the need for specific action to prevent and control hepatitis C infection according to their local situation.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for a national strategy on combating hepatitis C infection. [135521]

Yvette Cooper: Our approach to hepatitis C is to develop a strategic programme which involves co-ordination in areas such as public health work on prevention and surveillance; tackling drug misuse; prison healthcare; research; commissioning healthcare services and implementing the recommendations of the National Institute of Clinical Excellence.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the National Institute for Clinical Excellence will report on the treatment of HIV and hepatitis C infections. [136163]

Yvette Cooper: There are no plans at present for the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to produce guidance on drugs for the treatment of HIV. NICE completed appraisals of ribavirin and alfa interferon for hepatitis C on 31 October 2000. This guidance and further information on the NICE work programme can be found on NICE's website at www.nice.org.uk.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the National Director of Cancer Care's brief to reduce mortality from cancer includes liver cell cancer secondary to hepatitis C. [136160]

Yvette Cooper: Yes. We recently published the NHS Cancer Plan setting out a comprehensive strategy to tackle cancer and through a major programme of action linking prevention, diagnosis, treatment, care and research. The Plan pledges to cut the death rate from all cancers by one fifth by 2010, this includes the death rate from liver cell cancer secondary to hepatitis C.

AIDS

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money the Government spent on AIDS research in the financial year 1999–2000; how many new AIDS cases became diagnosed in that year; and how many deaths arising from contraction of AIDS occurred in that year. [135516]

Yvette Cooper: In the financial year 1999–2000, we spent £20.2 million on HIV/AIDS research[1]. During the same period, 3,714 new HIV/AIDS cases were diagnosed in the UK and 418 deaths due to HIV/AIDS were reported to have occurred.

[1] Actual spend by the Department of Health, Scottish Office, Welsh Office, Medical Research Council and other research councils.

Overhead Powerlines

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received concerning overhead powerlines; and what recent research his Department has undertaken on this subject. [135794]

Yvette Cooper: A number of letters have been received from Members of Parliament, research organisations, pressure groups and individual members of the public, concerning the possibility of health effects associated with proximity to power lines.

The National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) provides advice to us on these matters. In 1992, and again in 1994, the NRPB's Advisory Group on Non-ionising Radiation examined the evidence for an association between the incidence of cancer and exposure to electromagnetic fields and concluded that there was no clear evidence of an adverse health effect at the levels of electromagnetic field to which the public is normally exposed. There have been continuing concerns about this issue and the Advisory Group keeps the relevant research under review. The Group will be publishing a comprehensive review of the more recent studies in the next few months.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has recently commissioned on the possibility of a connection between overhead powerlines and cancer. [136429]

Yvette Cooper: The Department is currently funding both epidemiological and laboratory studies on powerlines and cancer. The Department also contributes to the World Health Organization International Electromagnetic Fields Project and has supported the United Kingdom Childhood Cancer Study.

In 1992, and again in 1994, the National Radiological Protection Board's Advisory Group on Non-ionising Radiation examined the evidence for an association between the incidence of cancer and exposure to electromagnetic fields and concluded that there was no clear evidence of an adverse health effect at the levels to which the public is normally exposed. The Advisory Group continues to monitor the issue and will be publishing a comprehensive review of recent research in the next few months.

Tobacco Additives

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish information about tobacco additives by brand in a format readily accessible and available to consumers. [135579]

Yvette Cooper: The information on additives by brand supplied by major United Kingdom tobacco companies is published in the Health Select Committee's recent report, "The tobacco industry and the health risks of smoking", Minutes of Evidence and Appendices (Appendix 32 to 36). The Report and evidence of the Committee are published by the Stationery Office of the House and can be accessed by internet at www.parliament.uk/commons/hsecom/htm

Influenza Vaccine

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he has taken to ensure sufficient influenza vaccine is available this winter; and if he will make a statement. [136154]

Yvette Cooper: This year, we have extended the recommended groups for influenza immunisation to include everyone aged 65 and over, irrespective of their underlying health, as well as younger people in established high risk groups. This increase has led to record numbers of vaccine being made available, nearly 11 million this year compared to 7.8 million last year, an increase of 40 per cent.

The Chief Medical Officer (CMO) wrote to all general practitioners in May informing them of the change in policy and asked them as a matter of urgency to review their list of people eligible to receive the flu vaccine, and, order additional vaccine if required. A further letter was issued from the CMO on 1 August to all GP's reminding them to order extra vaccine if they had not already done so.

Latest figures as at 31 October, show that 9.5 million doses of vaccine have already been distributed. This, along with the amount of vaccine still to be delivered, is a sufficient amount to exceed our immunisation target of 60 per cent. for this year.

GPs order their supply of flu vaccine direct from manufacturers. This year there are five suppliers of flu vaccine. Unfortunately one of the manufacturers, Solvay, has encountered problems in growing a strain of the vaccine which has led to delays in some deliveries. Solvay have been in touch with the affected GPs to tell them details of any delays, but have confirmed that all ordered vaccine will be delivered by the end of November, in time to protect people this winter.

Beta Interferon

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration the National Institute for Clinical Excellence has given to the social costs of the refusal to supply beta interferon to multiple sclerosis sufferers. [136400]

Mr. Denham: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) carries out appraisals in accordance with its framework document. This document states that

"its task is to assess the evidence of all the clinical and other health-related benefits of an intervention—taking this in a wide sense, to include impact on quality of life, relief of pain or disability etc as well as any impact on likely length of life—to estimate the associated costs, and to reach a judgment on whether on balance this intervention can be recommended as a cost-effective use of NHS and PSS resources".

Copies of NICE's Framework document are available in the Library.

nvCJD

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of the new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease care package will be earmarked for assisting in the early identification of the symptoms of the disease; [136278]

(2) what support he intends to give as part of the NVCJD care package to the families of victims who have been misdiagnosed. [136279]

Yvette Cooper: Patients will have access to the full range of services provided by the National Health Service and Social Services departments. The Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (CJD) Care Package Fund is intended to ensure that people diagnosed as having CJD have rapid access to comprehensive, appropriate packages of care. The speed of diagnosis in cases of CJD is improving all the time and the CJD Surveillance Unit continues to work towards further improvement.

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of misdiagnosis of new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease. [136277]

Yvette Cooper: No patient diagnosed as "definite" or "probable" vCJD by the National CJD Surveillance Unit has ever been found to have been suffering from another disease. Since March 1996 the Unit has had a significant number of suspected cases referred to them that, on further investigation, have turned out not to be vCJD cases.

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to raise the awareness of health practitioners of the early symptoms of new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease; [136282]

(2) what recent research he has commissioned into methods of early identification of the symptoms of new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease. [136281]

Yvette Cooper: The National Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease Surveillance Unit (CJDSU) continues to investigate all cases referred to it as possible variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (vCJD) and keeps diagnostic criteria under constant review. Expanded criteria which allowed "probable vCJD" to be diagnosed for the first time in patients who are still alive were published in March 2000 in a Department of Health press release (2000/0153). All general practitioners were informed about these criteria in August 2000, through the Chief Medical Officer's Update. In addition, the CJDSU regularly sends reminders and updates on vCJD to neurologists throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further research into the incubation period of CJD will be undertaken, and by whom, following the contraction of the disease by a 74-year-old. [136654]

Yvette Cooper: The Government-funded National Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease Surveillance Unit (CJDSU) continues to investigate all cases of variant CJD (vCJD) referred to it and analyses data collected to try and identify any common factors which might shed light on the route of exposure and the possible incubation period.

The Department has commissioned research to look for vCJD in the elderly population to see if cases may have been missed in this age group.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) groups and (b) individuals who are involved in research into nvCJD. [136619]

Yvette Cooper: Details of Government funded research projects on Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies (TSEs) including variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (vCJD) are available on the Medical Research Council's website (http://www.mrc.ac.uk/tse_2c.htm).

Huntingdon's Disease

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason Huntingdon's disease was selected as a condition which could be the subject of inquiry by insurance companies in deciding whether or not to offer insurance cover; and if he will make a statement. [136553]

Yvette Cooper: The Genetics and Insurance committee was established in 1999 by the United Kingdom Government to develop a procedure for assessing the scientific and actuarial relevance of genetic tests currently being used in insurance risk assessment and to evaluate each test against the criteria agreed. The application from the Association of British Insurers for consideration of two genetic tests for Huntingdon's Disease in life insurance was the first application to be received by the Genetics and Insurance Committee. The Genetics and Insurance Committee concluded that the scientific and actuarial evidence was sufficient for the results of these two tests to continue to be taken into account in setting insurance premiums.

The Human Genetics Commission has been asked to look at the wider social and ethical issues involved in the use of genetic data in insurance. The GAIC decision does not pre-empt that wider consideration.

NHS Direct

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if individuals will be able to obtain information on (a) abortion, (b) family planning services and (c) access to local NHS services through NHS Direct and the new NHS walk-in centres; and if he will make a statement. [136948]

Yvette Cooper: NHS Direct aims to provide information, advice and referrals to appropriate services for most conditions, including abortion and family planning.

NHS Direct and the walk-in centres play a central role in providing information and signposting people to appropriate services. They also have a valuable role to play in improving access to local sexual health services.

The information needs of the population is one of the issues that is being addressed in the sexual health and HIV/AIDS strategy due for launch in the spring.

Heart Disease

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the implementation of the National Service Framework for Coronary Heart Disease (a) nationally and (b) in the West Midlands. [136579]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 6 November 2000]: The National Service Framework (NSF) for coronary heart disease sets 12 national standards for improved prevention, diagnosis and treatment and goals to secure fair access to high quality services over the 10 year period. This will include building capacity, increasing specialised workforce, improved prevention and faster access to services.

The National Health Service Plan of 27 July is providing significant new money for CHD services:

> investment in heart disease services will be increased by an extra £230 million a year by 2003–04. In addition, there will be an extra £120 million of capital funding from the Treasury Capital Modernisation Fund over the next two years to March 2002, to expand capacity and modernise services. Furthermore, an extra £10 million has been announced to increase cardiac operations by a further 3,000 by 2003, in addition to the £50 million announced in October 1999 for an extra 3,000 operations by April 2002.
> Emergency care for heart attack patients is being reformed in a three year programme to train and equip ambulance paramedics to provide thrombolysis safely for appropriate patients. On average, patients will get thrombolysis one hour sooner than if they were taken to hospital first, saving up to 3,000 lives a year once fully implemented.

Additional investment announced this year includes £49 million new money for early CHD wins, £21 million to speed up ambulance response times, £15 million to support new rapid access chest pain clinics, £10 million for equipment to diagnose and treat CHD, and £3 million for the CHD Partnership programme.

Actions are under way to implement the NSF in the West Midlands in line with the milestones set nationally. Local delivery plans for implementation of the NSF have been received from the thirteen West Midlands health authorities.

Particular local initiatives include: 11 rapid access chest pain clinics across the region in the first roll out, including one at the Walsgrave Hospital, Coventry; New Cross Hospital, Wolverhampton, will be developed as the fourth cardiac surgical centre in the region; the Black Country CHD Collaborative are developing a network of cardiac care; Action Heart at Dudley and Shropshire health authority's Help to Quit are excellent initiatives in cardiac rehabilitation and smoking cessation respectively.

Rochdale NHS Trust

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to broaden the shortlist of candidates for the position of Chairman of Rochdale NHS Trust, beyond the proposal of the Regional NHS Executive Chair in July. [137004]

Mr. Denham: The regional chair considered the names of a number of candidates on the regional register as well as those of serving non-executives from the Rochdale area who were seen to have the necessary qualities for a chair appointment. The candidates subsequently invited for interview included the current chair, Mr. Hermann Jungmayr, but he declined to be interviewed. Two candidates were eventually interviewed, and both their names were recently recommended to Ministers for possible appointment to the post. A decision on the appointment is likely to be made shortly.

Treatment Withdrawal

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received and from whom concerning the legality of the British Medical Association's guidelines for the withholding and withdrawal of treatment. [137041]

Yvette Cooper: The Department has received approximately 200 representations concerning the British Medical Association guidelines on Withholding and Withdrawing Life-prolonging Treatment. These include representations from a number of professional, lay and religious organisations, Members of Parliament, individuals and a petition to the Prime Minister from the organisation "Against Legalised Euthanasia—Research and Teaching". Of these representations approximately 25 per cent. raised the issue concerning the legality of the guidelines.

Screening (Pregnant Women)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health authorities that currently offer pregnant women screening for (a) Down's syndrome and (b) cystic fibrosis; and if he will make a statement. [137375]

Yvette Cooper: This information is not collected centrally. A Lancet paper surveying the provision and method of antenatal Down's syndrome screening (page 1264, Vol. 154, 9 October, 1999) is available in the Library.

The United Kingdom National Screening Committee will build on this work to inform its implementation plans for a universal antenatal Down's syndrome screening programme. At present the Committee does not recommend universal antenatal screening for cystic fibrosis.

NHS Vacancies

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies there are for doctors at NHS hospitals in the Greater London area. [137385]

Mr. Denham: The available information is given in the table. Results from the Department of Health vacancies survey March 2000 were published in September 2000.

Department of Health vacancies survey, March 2000. Vacancies in NHS trusts in London region; medical and dental consultants as at 31 March 2000

	London region
3 month vacancies (whole time equivalents)	120
3 month vacancy rate	3.0 per cent.

Notes:
1. Three month vacancies are those posts that had been vacant for three months or more at the date of the survey.
2. The three month vacancy rate is calculated as three month vacancies (3 month vacancies + staff in post at 30 September 1999).
3. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

Human Genetics

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow from the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Education and Employment, (Ref. 2000/0064758 PODB) when he expects to receive from the Human Genetics Commission their wider study on the uses of genetic information. [137327]

Yvette Cooper: The Human Genetics Commission is currently considering the storage, protection and use of genetic information in various contexts and what may need to be done to ensure that concerns over the potential abuse of such information are addressed.

The Commission aims to submit a report and recommendations to Ministers by late 2001. This will take account of the results of a period of extensive consultation which begins on 27 November 2000.

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137429]

Ms Stuart: We fully support the aims of the International Year of Volunteers. Everyone benefits from volunteering and my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has issued a challenge to employers to give their employees paid time off to work in the community. This Department reacted positively to the challenge to support staff in undertaking voluntary activities. Department of Health staff are allowed a minimum of one day's paid leave per year to undertake voluntary activity. Furthermore, definitions of voluntary activity have been broadened, and managers are encouraged to exercise discretion and be flexible when considering requests for leave from work. We intend to undertake voluntary activity for a day during 2001.

Winter Pressures

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department has taken to ensure closer working practices to help reduce effects of winter pressures between social services and acute NHS hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [137124]

Ms Stuart: In May 2000, the Department issued guidance to all National Health Service organisations and Social Services Departments setting out whole system arrangements to ensure that they, together, respond well to seasonal pressures, and provide high-quality services for local people throughout the year. In 2000–01, the Government have already invested an additional £63 million in intermediate care beds and staff to prevent avoidable hospital admissions, to facilitate prompt discharges from hospital, and to support independence and independent living, particularly for the elderly.

Local Winter Planning Groups (LWPGs) are in place across England to ensure that effective service and contingency planning is in place for winter 2000–01. The Department has assessed all LWPG winter plans and has put in place monitoring arrangements to ensure seasonal pressures are identified and addressed immediately. Expert teams of health and social care professionals are also visiting health and social care communities across England to provide support and advice, and to promote and share good practice.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department has taken to disseminate best practice in dealing with winter pressures at (a) regional level, (b) health authority level, (c) trust level and (d) primary care group/trust level; and if he will make a statement. [137125]

Ms Stuart: Local Winter Planning Groups (LWPGs) have been established across England to ensure effective service and contingency planning for winter 2000–01. LWPGs include representatives of all National Health Service organisations, local councils with social services responsibilities and other local partners including the voluntary and independent sectors.

Best practice is disseminated through comprehensive guidance, national conferences, and visits by expert teams of health and social care professionals.

Nurses and Midwives

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many registered (i) nurses and (ii) midwives are aged (a) below 30, (b) 30 to 39, (c) 40 to 49, (d) 50 to 54, (e) 55 to 59 and (f) 60 years and over. [138247]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the table.

NHS hospital and community health services qualified nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff by age bands in England as at 30 September 1999

	Whole-time equivalents	Headcount
Under 30	42,990	45,440
30 to 39	85,840	104,050
40 to 49	69,310	82,160
50 to 54	26,380	30,560
55 to 59	12,810	15,310
60 +	3,490	4,570
Unknown	9,830	28,040
Total	250,650	310,140

Notes:
1. Figures exclude learners and agency staff.
2. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10.
3. Totals may not equal the sum of component parts due to rounding.

Spinal Surgery

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultant neurosurgeons who specialise in spinal surgery there are in England. [138044]

Mr. Denham: From the Department of Health Medical and Dental Workforce Census on 30 September 1999, there were around 140 Consultants in Neurosurgery in the National Health Service. Information about numbers of consultants specialising in spinal surgery is not collected centrally.

Hospital Drug Dispensing

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the impact on the primary care costs were hospital pharmacies permitted to dispense 28 day supplies of drugs to patients; [137752]

(2) if he will require hospitals to dispense drugs to in-patients from patient bed-side boxes; [137754]

(3) what plans he has to introduce 28 day original pack dispensing from hospital pharmacies; [137753]

(4) what plans he has to encourage patients to take with them all medicines they are taking when admitted to hospital. [137856]

Ms Stuart: "Pharmacy in the Future—Implementing the NHS Plan" (a copy of which is in the Library) makes clear that we expect National Health Service hospitals in England to review their pharmacy systems to make them efficient, timely and safe, and more patient focused.

To see that changes are made, NHS Executive regional offices will be rolling out a medicines management performance management framework specifically for hospitals later this year and the Department will be establishing a collaborative programme in order to spread and share best practice. This is likely to include, in appropriate cases, the use of medicines which patients bring into hospital on admission and self-administration schemes on wards (including the use of patient bed-side boxes). Hospitals are also likely to dispense medicines on discharge and to out-patients more frequently in complete original packs. Many such packs are designed by their manufacturers to provide a course of treatment lasting 28 days, although this varies from product to product, and the quantity to be prescribed for any given patient must, of course, reflect their clinical needs.

Re-engineering systems in this way will reduce waste and improve the cost effectiveness of the NHS's spending on medicines generally. It may well involve spending being incurred within hospitals which was previously incurred within primary care. The size of any such shift will vary from place to place depending on current practice and on the nature of new arrangements agreed locally. Work is under way, co-ordinated by NHS Executive regional offices, to ensure that local health commissioners and hospitals work together to ensure suitable funding arrangements are in place.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that hospital pharmacies conform with EU Directive 92/27/EEC on patient information; and what the estimated costs of such compliance are. [137751]

Ms Stuart: The Directive was incorporated into United Kingdom law by The Medicines (Marketing Authorisations etc.) Regulations 1994. These regulations apply to all people involved in the supply of medicines, including hospital pharmacies. It is the responsibility of the Medicines Control Agency to investigate suspected breaches of those regulations. We hold no information nationally on the cost to hospitals of meeting their obligations under these regulations.

Hospital Hygiene

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Government's initiative to improve hospital cleanliness following the distribution of funds directly to hospital trusts for this purpose. [137740]

Mr. Denham: Over £30 million was allocated directly to National Health Service trusts at the end of July to start an immediate national clean-up campaign.

Rapid assessments of all acute hospitals were carried out following initial visits in July. More detailed assessments have been made following further visits to the 400 hospitals by the patient environment action teams (PEAT). Some 300 experienced managers and professionals, drawn from the NHS, private sector and supported by patient organisations were involved in these visits.

Every trust has prepared an action plan, which has been agreed by the Department. NHS Estates will validate and support the action plans. Each trust has a board member who will take personal responsibility for hospital cleanliness.

There will be five clean hospital summits in November for senior trust managers to share experiences and good practice.

Unannounced visits to hospitals will also be made in January, by the PEAT teams, to check that standards of cleanliness in our hospitals have improved, and that procedures are in place to ensure that these improved standards will be maintained. Once these visits have been completed we will be in a position to better assess how effective the initial stage of the programme has been.

To ensure that cleanliness in hospitals is maintained in the future we are drawing up a standard for cleanliness for all hospitals; these will be incorporated into the National Performance Assessment Framework and will be introduced next year.

Anticoagulant Clinics

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to set up anticoagulant clinics in community pharmacies. [137855]

Ms Stuart: In the "Pharmacy in the Future—Implementing the NHS Plan" (a copy of which is in the Library) we said that by 2004 all primary care groups and primary care trusts will have schemes in place so that people get more help from pharmacists in using their medicines. Monitoring patients' anticoagulant therapy, whether in community pharmacies or elsewhere, is one of many ways in which pharmacists may potentially help people get the most out of their medicines.

Pharmacists

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to address the pay differentials between community pharmacists and hospital pharmacists. [137741]

Mr. Denham: For 1999–2000 lower graded hospital pharmacists were targeted for an enhanced pay award of up to 12 per cent. to help address recruitment and retention problems. Hospital pharmacists in common with other groups of non pay review body staff have been offered a pay increase of 3.25 per cent. for 2000–01, and for 2001–02 a minimum increase of RPIX at December 2000 plus 0.5 per cent. subject to progress on negotiations with the trade unions on proposals for modernising the National Health Service pay system.

The NHS does not directly employ or determine the pay of pharmacists working in community pharmacies.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce postgraduate structured training and experience programmes for pharmacists (a) for newly qualified graduates and (b) for existing community and hospital pharmacists. [137854]

Mr. Denham: A range of postgraduate training opportunities is available to both community and hospital pharmacists.

Hospital-acquired Infection

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress in combating hospital-acquired MRSA infections. [137985]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) on 10 November 2000, Official Report, column 431W.

DEFENCE

Whistleblowers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures exist in his Department for a civil servant to report actions which (a) are illegal, improper, or unethical, (b) are in breach of constitutional convention or a professional code, (c) may involve possible maladministration and (d) are otherwise inconsistent with the Civil Service Code. [135452]

Dr. Moonie: A copy of the Civil Service Code was issued to every MOD civil servant in May 1999. The Department's procedures require staff to report any matters of concern within the scope of the Code to their third line manager in the first instance. If the matter cannot be resolved at this level staff have a right of appeal to their Top Level Budget Holder and, ultimately, to the Permanent Under Secretary of State. The procedures also make provision for staff to be able to discuss concerns in confidence with a senior officer outside of their management area if they wish. If, having raised a matter of concern to them within the Department, a member of staff considers that he or she has not received a reasonable response there is a right of appeal to the Civil Service Commissioners.

These procedures are set out in the Department's Personnel Manual and reiterated in departmental instructions regularly circulated to all staff.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out, including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the constituency, the effect on the Manchester, Gorton constituency of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [136172]

Dr. Moonie: There have been no significant effects on the Gorton constituency or the surrounding area. Gorton's Territorial Army centres were retained as a result of the 1998 restructuring review.

Departmental Employees (New Deal)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff his Department employs under the New Deal for Young People. [137952]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 551W.

Porton Down

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent measures he has introduced to improve the reliability and security of postal services to and from Porton Down. [137685]

Dr. Moonie: None, as the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) site at Porton Down has not experienced any problems with the reliability and security of postal services.

Women (Combat Roles)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent studies his Department has undertaken of the experience of other countries' armed forces in respect of women in combat roles. [137908]

Mr. Hoon: We are currently engaged in a study, announced in the 1998 Strategic Defence Review, to evaluate the impact on combat effectiveness since opening 70 per cent. of posts in the Army to women and of allowing them to serve in specialist billets "attached" to the Royal Marines. The study, which is due to report to Ministers in 2001, will also make an assessment on the armed forces' combat effectiveness of removing the present exclusion of women from the Royal Marines General Service, Royal Armoured Corps (including the Household Cavalry), Infantry and RAF Regiment. As part of this study we have drawn upon other countries' experiences in respect of women in combat roles.

RAF Dishforth

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations he has received on redeployment from Dishforth Airfield to Royal Naval Air Station Yeovilton, and for disposal or re-use of Dishforth Airfield; [137703]

(2) if he will make a statement on the long-term future for RAF Dishforth. [137705]

Mr. Spellar: The primary occupier of the former RAF Dishforth (now Dishforth Airfield) is 9 Regiment Army Corps (9 Reg AAC), a Joint Helicopter Command (JHC) unit. The JHC is currently engaged in carrying out an estates rationalisation study and one of the options is to re-deploy all helicopters and manpower from Dishforth Airfield to Royal Naval Air Station Yeovilton. The study is due to report in autumn 2001 and no decisions on the redeployment of manpower currently based at Dishforth or the disposal or re-use of Dishforth Airfield will be made until then. In the meantime, no representations have been received on the future of Dishforth, except for the hon. Member's own letter to me of 6 November.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military and civilian posts there are at Dishforth Airfield. [137704]

Mr. Spellar: There are currently 383 military posts and 39 civilian posts at Dishforth Airfield. By April 2001 these numbers will rise to 538 military posts and 43 civilian posts. There are a further 58 civilian staff currently employed by Sodexho, the site contractor. Military personnel are also deployed from time to time from RAF Linton-on-Ouse, as requested.

Ships (Asbestos)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in the removal of asbestos from his Department's ships. [137692]

Dr. Moonie: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my hon. Friend, the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Kilfoyle), the then Under-Secretary of State for Defence, gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Dr. Godman) on 12 January 2000, Official Report, column 166W.

Good progress is being made on our ongoing 10 years programme to identify safe non-asbestos alternatives and introduce them into service at every opportunity including planned maintenance and refit periods. For example, we are currently trialling replacements in two particularly challenging areas: the ship propeller shaft brakes and high pressure steam system joints. If the trials are successful we shall fit replacements in a much earlier timescale than originally expected.

Progress on Ministry of Defence asbestos elimination measures, including those for Royal Navy ships, was presented to the Health and Safety Commission in May this year who fully endorsed the approach being taken.

Berths

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number and locations of (a) X berths and (b) Z berths available to his Department. [137691]

Mr. Spellar: Including all berths and docks, the total number of X and Z berths available is, respectively, 40 and 26. These are principally located in the Naval Bases of Devonport and Clyde, and the privatised facilities at Barrow in Furness, Rosyth and Devonport. The precise locations and numbers are as follows:

List of the locations of X berths

	Number
Faslane	8
Devonport and Plymouth Sound	16
Rosyth	11

List of the locations of Z berths

	Number
Falkland Islands	1
Loch Goil	1
Rothesay	1
Liverpool	[1]2
Isle of Skye	1
Loch Ewe	2
Bermuda	3
Devonport and Plymouth Sound	2
Diego Garcia	2
Portsmouth	1
Spithead	4
Southampton	1
Gibraltar	2
Coulport	1

[1] The use of the berths in Liverpool is currently in abeyance awaiting final resolution of the mechanism for the implementation of the potassium iodate tablets countermeasure distribution plan.

Barrow in Furness owned by BAE Systems Marine Ltd.[1]

	Berths
Barrow in Furness Devonshire Dock	4 × X
Barrow in Furness Buccleuch Dock	1 × X
Barrow in Furness	2 × Z

[1] The berths listed against Barrow in Furness are owned by BAE Systems Marine Ltd. and have "lapsed". The necessary procedures to revalidate the berths will be instigated 12 months prior to reactor core installation for the Astute Class submarines currently on contract.

Royal Air Force

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that overspending on defence procurement projects does not affect RAF frontline strength. [138159]

Dr. Moonie: There are no current plans to depart from the conclusions reached in the Strategic Defence Review about the frontline strength of the RAF, although these plans are regularly reviewed.

Training (Foreign Troops)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the (a) gross and (b) net income derived from the training of personnel from foreign armed forces in the last year for which figures are available. [138315]

Mr. Spellar: The information is not held in the format requested. The funds expended training solely foreign personnel cannot be separated from the overall cost of the activity. Furthermore, the amount of receipts generated solely from training foreign personnel is not recorded separately. As a result I can provide only the amount of receipts recovered for the provision of education and training in general. In 1990–2000, this sum was just over £58 million.

Controlled Substances

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of (a) the Army, (b) the Navy and (c) the RAF tested positive for the use of controlled substances in the most recent testing programme, stating in each instance what percentage of trained strength tested positive for (a) cannabis, (b) cocaine, (c) heroin and (d) other controlled substances; and if he will make a statement. [137861]

Mr. Spellar: From 1 January to mid-October 2000, 580 Army personnel tested positive. Of the trained strength, 0.26 per cent. tested positive for cannabis, 0.04 per cent. for cocaine and 0.10 per cent. for other controlled substances as previously described. No one on the trained strength tested positive for heroin.

During the same period, 41 Naval Service personnel (including Royal Marines) tested positive. Of the trained strength, 0.04 per cent. tested positive for cannabis, 0.01 per cent. for cocaine and 0.03 per cent. for other controlled substances (Ecstasy, LSD, Amphetamines, Benzodiazepines and Performance Enhancing Drugs). No one on the trained strength tested positive for heroin.

The corresponding figures for the RAF record that 14 personnel tested positive. Of the trained strength, 0.08 per cent. tested positive for cannabis, 0.03 per cent. for cocaine and 0.03 per cent. for other controlled substances as previously described. No one on the trained strength tested positive for heroin.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the controlled substances that members of the armed forces were routinely tested for in (a) 1996, (b) 1997, (c) 1998, (d) 1999 and (e) 2000; what plans he has to adjust the testing programme with regard to (i) the number of substances tested for, (ii) the interval between testing and (iii) the penalties for service personnel testing positive; and if he will make a statement. [137863]

Mr. Spellar: When first introduced by the Army in 1995, the Compulsory Drug Testing (CDT) programme routinely tested for: Cannabis, Cocaine, Amphetamines (including Ecstasy) and one of Opiates, Benzodiazepines or LSD. Since 15 October 1999, the tri-Service programme has tested routinely for: Cannabis, Cocaine, Amphetamines (including Ecstasy), Benzodiazepines and one of other Opiates or LSD.

If prevailing drug trends change, or a particular risk exists that is not covered by the routine testing programme and where appropriate analytical technology is available, other drugs of misuse can be added, exceptionally, to the testing programmes, e.g. performance enhancing drugs.

Increasing the frequency of CDT enhances deterrence but a balance must be established between deterrence and minimising disruption to the services operational and training commitments. A recent amendment to the random rolling drug testing strategy has increased the probability of higher risk groups being tested on a more frequent basis, without having a significant impact on the services' ability to meet their operational liability.

It continues to be service policy that, save in exceptional cases, a positive random test result, or the refusal to provide a specimen, will lead to Army and RAF officers being required to resign and to administrative discharge in the case of an RN officer. Soldiers, ratings and airmen will normally be administratively discharged. Personnel of the rank of lance corporal (and equivalent in the other services) and below may be retained in exceptional circumstances at the discretion of their Commanding Officer.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how often are members of (a) the Army, (b) the Navy and (c) the RAF tested for the use of controlled substances; which controlled substances are tested for; which testing kits are used; and if he will make a statement. [137862]

Mr. Spellar: The Army aims to test all personnel annually for drugs. Units that are deemed to be at higher risk by nature of their location or their previous Compulsory Drug Testing (CDT) record may be subject to more frequent testing. The Naval Service aims to conduct random testing in every ship and establishment at least annually, with some establishments subject to more regular testing, and this year plans to test approximately 30 per cent. of its personnel. The RAF aims to test 25 per cent. of its personnel annually. The services conduct their random CDT agenda as part of a rolling programme.

Currently, the tri-service programme tests routinely for: Cannabis, Cocaine, Amphetamines (including Ecstasy), Benzodiazepines and one of either Opiates or LSD.

The drug testing process utilises Microgenics Clonable Enzyme Doner Immune-Assay (CEDIA) technology. Previous immuno-assay technologies utilised were Syva's EMTII and Roche's ONLINE. Samples that screen positive are then confirmed by Gas Chromatography/ Mass Spectrometry (GC/MS). A sample will be reported positive only after the presence of drugs has been verified by the confirmatory GC/MS process.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Solicitor-General on how many occasions since 21 August he has referred to the Court of Appeal sentences imposed for drug trafficking. [137885]

The Solicitor-General: With effect from 21 August 2000 the Attorney-General was given the power to refer sentences passed in the Crown court for drugs trafficking offences. These include offences of production or supply of controlled drugs contrary to ss.4(2) and (3) of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, cultivation of cannabis contrary to s.6(2) of the Misuse of Drugs Act and offences contrary to the Customs and Management Act 1979 in connection with a prohibition or restriction on importation or exportation of a controlled drug within s.2 of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. The Attorney-General has just referred the first case under these provisions to the Court of Appeal.

Departmental Employees (New Deal)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Solicitor-General how many people his Department employs under the New Deal for Young People. [137949]

The Solicitor-General: I refer to the answer given by the Cabinet Office on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 551W.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Nitrous Oxides

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what estimate he has made of the number of deaths caused by emissions of nitrous oxides in each of the past three years; [136098]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effects on human health of nitrous oxides emissions from waste incinerators; and if he will make a statement; [136100]

(3) what estimate he has made of the amount of nitrous oxides that will be emitted by waste incinerators in each of the next three years. [136099]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 2 November 2000]: I assume the hon. Member means "nitrogen oxides", often referred to as "nox" (NO_x), of which nitrogen dioxide forms a large proportion and which is regarded as the main pollutant of health concern within NO_x.

At relatively high concentrations, nitrogen dioxide causes inflammation of the airways. There is evidence to show that long-term exposure to nitrogen dioxide may affect lung function and that nitrogen dioxide may enhance the response of sensitised individuals to allergens. Studies have reported associations between respiratory hospital admissions and nitrogen dioxide levels but it is unclear whether this effect is due to nitrogen dioxide itself or to particles which often increase at the same time as nitrogen dioxide. The source of the nitrogen dioxide is not relevant.

The Government have not estimated deaths caused by NO_x emissions. The 1998 report of the Department of Health's Committee on Medical Effects of Air Pollutants "Quantification of the Effects of Air Pollution on Health in the United Kingdom" (copies of which are in the House Libraries) considered that, although there was some evidence of an effect of nitrogen dioxide on mortality, this was too uncertain to use to quantify numbers of deaths. However, nitrogen oxides contribute to the formation of secondary particles (nitrates) and ozone. Deaths brought forward by ozone and particles were quantified by COMEAP. COMEAP did not ascribe proportions of these deaths to particular ozone precursors such as nitrogen oxides or to particular types of particles such as nitrates.

The assessment of the costs and benefits of the proposed waste incineration directive commissioned by the Department from Entec UK Ltd. (copies of which are in the House Libraries) on the basis of COMEAP data used an assumption about the proportion of ozone attributable to NO_x to calculate the marginal health benefits of the NO_x limits in the proposal. It concluded that the proposed NO_x limit would prevent 46 deaths being brought forward and prevent or delay 91 respiratory hospital admissions as a result of the formation of ozone. Entec UK have very recently recognised a mathematical error in the original calculation, such that the figures given for the marginal health benefits of the proposed NO_x limits were overstated. The correct figures for health effects of NO_x are in fact significantly lower—0.7 deaths not brought forward and 0.9 respiratory hospital admissions not brought forward as a result of the formation of ozone.

The National Atmospheric Emissions Inventory holds data for estimated total UK NO_x emissions from three incineration sectors—sewage sludge incineration, poultry litter incineration and municipal waste incineration. This data have been extrapolated to give projected NO_x emissions for 2000, 2005, 2010, 2015 and 2020, using assumptions about changes in capacity, but without taking into account the NO_x limits in the proposed waste incineration directive. The figures are set out in the table. On the basis of the projected 2000 total NO_x figure from all three sectors, the incineration sectors covered contribute only 0.3 per cent. of the UK total NO_x emissions.

Industrial Accidents (Humberside)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) fatal industrial accidents and (b) industrial accidents involving a stay in hospital of over 24 hours have occurred in the Humberside Region since 1 January 1999. [134239]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 2 November 2000]: (a) Fatal Accident. The number of fatal accidents which occurred in Humberside from 1 January 1999 to 16 October 2000 and which have been reported to HSE as required by the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995 is 16.

(b) Injuries involving a hospital stay. HSE only records details of major injuries as defined in RIDDOR (Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regs 1995). This includes requiring admission to hospital for more than 24 hours along with serious injuries such as a fracture, amputation, loss of sight etc.

There were 1,217 major injuries logged which came into this category.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) deaths and (b) injuries involving a stay in hospital occurred in premises on Humberside which were under a prohibition notice in the last five years. [134240]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 2 November 2000]: There were three deaths which have occurred in premises on or after the date a Prohibition Notice was served.

HSE only records details of major injuries as defined in RIDDOR (Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regs 1995). This includes requiring admission to hospital for more than 24 hours along with serious injuries such as a fracture, amputation, loss of sight etc. There were 78 major injuries logged which came into this category.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many Band 2 and Band 3 HSE inspectors there are in the Hull office. [134241]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 2 November 2000]: There are currently two Band 2 and three Band 3 HSE inspectors based in the Hull office. In addition a specialist Band 3 trainee is currently based in Hull for a six month period. The B2 inspectors manage teams of inspectors in the Leeds and Sheffield offices respectively. Currently two of the B3 inspectors are engaged on operational duties working for managers located in the Leeds and Sheffield offices.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many requests for HSE inspectors to make educational and promotional visits to the Humber Region in the past two years were made to the Leeds and Sheffield offices of the HSE; and how many such requests were successful. [134244]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 2 November 2000]: Records are not kept of request for educational and promotional visits. Our records show that in the last two years inspectors made a total of 115 educational contacts in Humberside.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 11 July 2000, Official Report, column 502W, on the Health and Safety Executive, what meetings were held with (a) local employers, (b) local trade unions and (c) local authorities before the meeting with the Chairman of the HSC and the Regional Director of the HSE. [134245]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 2 November 2000]: The Chair of HSC and the Regional Director of HSE's Yorkshire and North East Region met with Hull trade unionists on 15 May this year. Prior to this, no meetings had been held with local employers, local trade unions and local authorities.

A419/A417 (Nettleton Bottom)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 31 October 2000, Official Report, column 387W, on the A419/A417 at Nettleton Bottom, (a) how many (i) fatalities and (ii) serious accidents there were in the last three years on the road and (b) what is the estimated cost of the Highway Agency's safety improvement scheme for the road. [137209]

Mr. Hill: There have been one fatal and two serious accidents on the A417 at Nettleton Bottom in the last three years.

The estimated cost of the Nettleton Bottom Improvement (Phase II) Safety Scheme is £214,180.

NHS Trusts and Social Landlord Partnerships

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the performance of NHS trusts and resigistered social landlords partnerships; if he will list the locations where such partnership schemes have been initiated; and what plans he has to further extend the partnership scheme. [137230]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 7 November 2000]: We are keen to encourage partnerships between NHS trusts and registered social landlords for the development of affordable accommodation for health service employees. I understand that the Department of Health is currently collecting information of the partnerships which have been formed but I am unable to list their locations at this stage. It will not be possible to carry out any assessments of their performance until information on the partnerships has been collected.

I expect partnerships to be encouraged further through the Starter Home Initiative the details of which will be announced in the new Session of Parliament. This initiative will provide assistance to key workers in high cost areas to purchase their own home. I expect employees of NHS trusts to be among those who will benefit from this scheme.

Resettlement Costs (Flooding)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the benefits of introducing a scheme to provide financial assistance to enable householders to resettle should it prove economically unviable to provide long-term defences against flooding. [137509]

Mr. Mullin: The Government's first priority is to see what improvements can be made to flood defences, so that resettlement can be avoided. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has recently announced that existing funding for flood defence work will be increased by a total of £51 million over this and the next three years. This additional funding will allow more river-based defence schemes to be progressed.

Departmental Employees (New Deal)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many staff are employed by his Department under the New Deal for Young People. [137960]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The number of New Deal staff employed by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and its Agencies is 51. Of these 14 are in the category of young people (18 to 24 year olds).

Registered Social Landlords

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to gather information centrally on the previous employers of the most senior staff of registered social landlords that have taken over former local authority housing stock and the names and relevant financial interests of the chairs of the boards of these organisations. [137707]

Mr. Mullin: Registered Social Landlords are not-for-profit companies independent of the public sector. Therefore I do not believe it would be appropriate for the Department to gather and hold centrally the information suggested by my hon. Friend.

Affordable Homes

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to ensure that homes for which planning permission is given on the basis of affordability remain affordable on re-sale or reallocation. [137708]

Mr. Mullin: We already provide guidance to local planning authorities on this issue. Planning obligations and conditions may be used to ensure that affordable housing provided through planning policy is secured, either initially or in perpetuity, for occupation by people in need of such housing. Detailed guidance is set out in Planning Policy Guidance note 3: "Housing" and Circular 6/98, "Planning and Affordable Housing". All affordable housing provided by Registered Social Landlords using Social Housing Grant must continue to be let at affordable rents as a condition of receiving the grant.

Directly Elected Mayor

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to increase turnouts in local referenda on directly elected mayors; and what plans he has to provide public funds for this purpose. [138007]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Chapter 13 of the guidance on new council constitutions, placed in the Library of the House on the 26 October 2000, indicates measures for local authorities to maximise turnout at local referendums and states that we are considering the introduction of certain innovations in electoral practice in the proposed regulations on referendums. As stated in the Local Government Bill explanatory notes, published on 26 November 1999, savings arising are expected to offset, or more than offset, any additional costs that may fall to local authorities as a result of adopting new decision-making arrangements including the costs associated with the holding of referendums.

Executive/Scrutiny Arrangements

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those small district councils which will be exempted from the regime of an executive/scrutiny split under the Local Government Act 2000. [138004]

Ms Beverley Hughes: All councils are required by the Local Government Act 2000 to have separate scrutiny arrangements in their new constitutions. Under the Act these new constitutions for district councils in two tier areas with a population below 85,000 (as estimated by the Registrar General on 30 June 1999) may involve either executive or alternative arrangements. I have placed a list of those councils in the Library of the House.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many properties in the Leeds, Central parliamentary constituency have benefited from improvements funded through the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme in each of the last 10 years. [138073]

Mr. Meacher: The table identifies the number of properties receiving insulation measures and value of grant for each of the last 10 financial years.

Financial year	Number of grants	Value of grants (£000)
1991–92	761	91.5
1992–93	629	87.8
1993–94	1,309	190.7

[1] A further 503 households are awaiting permission from the social or private landlords for work to be carried out

The new Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES) for England was launched on 1 June 2000. It replaced the more basic scheme that operated since 1991. HEES provides packages of insulation and heating measures, linked to the condition of the property and the type of householder. The grant maximum increased from £315 up to £2,000. As a consequence, the average value of work per household has substantially increased.

Waste

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce legislation to prevent the importing of waste into the United Kingdom for disposal. [138186]

Mr. Meacher: The UK already prohibits most imports of waste for final disposal. Under the legally binding United Kingdom Management Plan for Exports and Imports of Waste, which came into effect in June 1996, the UK accepts wastes only from those countries which cannot reasonably be expected to deal with specific wastes in an environmentally sound manner. This is because we have the necessary treatment facilities which meet tough environmental standards. This policy is designed to encourage countries to become as self-sufficient as possible in waste disposal.

Consistent with European law, however, the UK cannot prohibit imports of wastes for recovery, which could include shipments of municipal wastes for incineration with energy recovery. However, shipments of municipal waste still require the prior consent of the UK enforcement authorities and would have to meet specific criteria set out in the UK Plan. There may be grounds for objecting to individual shipments if the primary purpose of the importing facility is to treat local wastes and those wastes will be displaced by the proposed imports. Available data show that no imports of municipal waste have taken place since the existing UK Plan came into effect in 1996.

UK policies and procedures on the acceptance of waste imports are being considered as part of the current review of the UK Plan.

Loop Railway Lines (Hatfield)

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reports he has received about movement in the loop railway lines around Hatfield since 17 October. [137822]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 10 November 2000]: After the accident at Hatfield on 17 October, services were diverted on to the line via Hertford. The Hatfield line has now re-opened, with the first passenger service on Friday 10 November.

Freight Vehicles and Buses

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) freight vehicles and (b) buses have converted to (i) LPG and (ii) CNG since May 1997. [138237]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 13 November 2000]: DVLA statistics show that from the end of June 1997 to the end of June 2000, the number of goods vehicles (over 3.5 tonnes gross vehicle weight) running on gas increased by 126 to a total of 175. Over the same period, the number of buses running on gas increased by 62 to a total of 103. DVLA's figures do not distinguish between the road fuel gases liquid petroleum gas and compressed natural gas.

Incineration

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure relevant information in respect of incineration is drawn to the attention of Ministers in his Department. [137539]

Mr. Mullin: None, as Ministers are as a matter of course kept fully in touch with waste management policy issues through the Department.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the information made available to Ministers in the last six months relating to anticipated deaths and pollution-related illnesses associated with proposed incinerators. [137540]

Mr. Mullin: Ministers have been kept fully in touch with work on the health effects of incinerators. Most recently, information provided to Ministers has included the correction by the consultants Entec UK Ltd. to their estimate of benefits of the proposed waste incineration directive[1], showing that some of the figures for health effects currently in circulation are very significant over estimates. (The error is explained in EM 10417/00 on the proposed waste incineration directive).

Frogs

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 12 October CM/23437/00, what information as to the basis of his policy he has received from English Nature and their contacts with those in other countries, undertaking research into frog disease and mortality; and if he will make a statement. [136223]

Mr. Mullin: English Nature, our statutory advisers, regularly review the work undertaken within the international scientific arena on issues that may affect native species, including amphibians, and will shortly be meeting with the Declining Amphibian Populations Task Force (a specialist group that co-ordinates and funds work on amphibian diseases) to discuss a contingency plan should significant pathogens be detected in British frog populations.

Retrospective Planning Applications

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to strengthen the powers of local authorities to require retrospective planning applications. [136450]

Ms Beverley Hughes: None. Local planning authorities can already invite a retrospective planning application in respect of unauthorised development where they judge that there are no planning objections to it. Otherwise, authorities already have wide ranging enforcement powers to control development undertaken without planning permission. We have no current plans to strengthen these powers further.

Housing Density

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was housing density, as measured by homes per hectare, in (a) 1996, (b) 1997, (c) 1998, (d) 1999 and (e) from January. [138416]

Ms Beverley Hughes: New dwellings in England were built at an average density of 25 per hectare between 1994 and 1998. Figures for individual years have not yet been published. My Department is conducting research looking at this and other aspects of the publication of these statistics. This research should be completed next year.

Liverpool Street-Norwich Line

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations regarding delays to trains on the Liverpool Street, London to Norwich line, since 17 October have been (a) received by his Department and (b) made by his Department to Railtrack plc. [138415]

Mr. Hill: We have received one representation from a member of public about delays on the London Liverpool Street to Norwich line. We have made no representations to Railtrack specifically on delays to trains on this line but we are meeting regularly with Railtrack and the Association of Train Operating Companies to discuss progress with the national track recovery plan.

Capping Powers

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to use the reserve capping powers for 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [138469]

Ms Armstrong: It is the Government's policy that local authorities should accept greater responsibility for setting their own budget and council tax increases. That is why we abolished crude and universal capping. However, we retain reserve powers to protect council tax payers from excessive increases. We identified three authorities whose council tax and budget increases in 1999–2000 and 2000–01 were at the top end of the range of increases for all authorities in England. I met those authorities in July. I have considered carefully the points they put to me. I have also taken account of the fact that the average council tax increases in England fell in 2000 for the second year running. On balance, I have decided not to use the new reserve powers this year. Against a background in which the Government have announced a significant increase in funding for local authorities for the next three years, all local authorities should budget responsibly.

Climate Change

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his objectives for the forthcoming climate change negotiations in The Hague. [138611]

Mr. Prescott: The Sixth Conference of the Parties (COP 6) to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change will aim to agree a detailed framework for the implementation of the Kyoto Protocol.

The Government want to negotiate an agreement which can be endorsed by all countries; pave the way to ratification by sufficient numbers of countries for the Protocol to enter into force by 2002; and will lead to action to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by developed countries which are currently responsible for 60 per cent. of the world's emissions. We will work for an agreement that safeguards the environmental integrity of the Protocol, taking into accounts its economic impacts and providing certainty for business.

Health and Safety Laboratory

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Health and Safety Laboratory will publish its annual report and accounts for 1999–2000. [138695]

Mr. Meacher: The Health and Safety Laboratory has today published the 1999–2000 Annual Report and Accounts, and copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Business-Government Links

53. Maria Eagle: To ask the President of the Council what progress has been made in improving the Government's links with the business community through the business communications unit. [136378]

Mrs. Beckett: The Business Coordination Unit in my Department is making a significant contribution to improving Government contact with all sectors of business across the UK. Business representatives have warmly welcomed the work of the Unit and I look forward to further progress.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Oral Questions

49. Mr. David Heath: To ask the President of the Council if she will bring proposals to the Select Committee on Modernisation of the House of Commons to allow for greater topicality in oral questions to Ministers. [136374]

Mr. Tipping: There is a matter which has concerned Committees of this House over several decades. The Modernisation Committee are currently reviewing their work programme—I will ensure that this issue is raised as a potential area for consideration.

House of Commons (Maintenance)

51. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chairman of the Finance and Services Committee what has been the total sum spent on repairing, improving and maintaining the House of Commons buildings over the past 12 months. [136376]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The House of Commons spent some £25 million on repairing, improving and maintaining the House of Commons buildings in the last full financial year.

Commission Minutes

52. Angela Smith: To ask the Chairman of the Finance and Services Committee to ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will undertake to publish notes of minutes of the meetings of the House of Commons Commission within two weeks of each meeting. [136377]

Mr. Kirkwood: The Commission's meetings are deliberative. The Commission does publish considerable details about the House's management and services for Members in its annual report, the last of which was published on 19 July 2000 (HC 808).

I can tell the hon. Member that we are considering ways of providing hon. Members with information on a more regular basis, including information on the parliamentary intranet, in line with recommendations of the Braithwaite review of management and services. As soon as decisions about this are made, I will ensure that the House is informed.

Regional Standing Committee

54. Dr. Naysmith: To ask the President of the Council what progress has been made in setting up the regional Standing Committee. [136379]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Clark) on 14 November 2000, Official Report, column 799.

Portcullis House

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will make a statement on progress of the commissioning of Portcullis House. [136367]

Sir Sydney Chapman: The first hon. Member moved into the building on 11 September and of the 210 Members' offices over 180 have now been occupied. It is expected that all moves will be completed this month.

As I indicated in the answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Totnes (Mr. Steen) on 31 October 2000, Official Report, column 352W, the overwhelming response from hon. Members and their staff has been very positive, welcoming the ambience and good working facilities provided in the building.

The Vote Office, Post Office and Serjeant at Arms Service desk opened in time for the return of the House after the summer adjournment. The meeting and conference rooms were also available, and the Select Committee rooms are now operational.

The e-Library has been handed over to that Department and should be operational by the State Opening.

The Refreshment Department's accommodation was handed over on 6 November. I understand that after a period to move in their stock and equipment and conduct staff training, the Department hopes to open "the adjournment" brasserie and "the debate" self service restaurant in time for the State Opening. The refreshment service to the first floor meeting rooms will start operating on a trial basis this week with a view to starting a full operation by 4 December.

Public Tours (Summer Adjournment)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what assessment she has made of the operation of arrangements for public tours during the summer adjournment. [136365]

Mrs. Roe: A report by the Visitor Manager on the results of the trial opening to visitors from 7 August to 16 September was considered by my Committee at its meeting on 7 November, together with the results of a visitor satisfaction survey conducted by the University of Greenwich Business School. The Committee was pleased, and encouraged, to note that visitor satisfaction level with both the guided tour itself and the performance of the tour guides was exceptionally high. Visitors felt very strongly, and were very positive, about the importance of continuing to offer public tours during the summer recess. My Committee will be considering our draft Report, which, when agreed, will be put before the House for its consideration shortly. I understand a similar assessment of the trial opening is being carried out by the relevant Committee of the House of Lords.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Malawi

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the Government Departments she is funding in Malawi and the amount funded in each case. [136643]

Clare Short: We do not fund individual Departments directly. We support a number of sectoral programmes, each of which may be sponsored by one or more Departments. Our approach to this, in common with other donors, is set out in the Departmental Report 2000 (CM4610, e.g. page 14, page 93), a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Education Programmes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action she is taking to encourage Third World countries which benefit from debt relief to use such benefits to develop education programmes for young people. [137383]

Clare Short: The reason for debt relief is to assist on poverty reduction. The country-led approach to development embodied in the Poverty Reduction Strategy Programmes (PRSP) process provides a framework for allocating all Government resources, including savings from debt relief and development assistance, so that they make maximum impact on poverty. Investing in education is vitally important for development and poverty reduction. Achieving universal primary education by 2015 is one of the International Development Targets. We and others have repeatedly made it clear that real progress will only be achieved and sustained if education, and basic education in particular, is given the priority it deserves within PRSPs. Since May 1997 we have committed over £400 million to helping Governments in developing countries to put in place sustainable education systems able to provide high-quality primary education to all their children. We will do more.

Palestinian Schools

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the Palestinian Authority's decision to close the schools under their control. [137502]

Clare Short: We understand that the Palestinian Authority closed its schools for security reasons but that most of them have now re-opened. This is entirely a matter for the Palestinian authorities.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much aid Her Majesty's Government have spent on Palestinian education and schools in each of the last six years. [137500]

Clare Short: UK development assistance for Palestinian education since 1995–96 has totalled £3,371,925. This includes support to the Palestinian Authority and NGOs. Available information on annual expenditure is as follows:

Year	£
1995–96	328,943
1996–87	561,560
1997–98	1,176,306
1998–99	757,679
1999–2000	547,437

In addition the UK has provided a total of £47,278,000 to the United Nations Works and Relief Agency, mainly as contributions to the Agency's core budget. This is used to provide education, health and welfare services to Palestinian refugees in the West Bank and Gaza and neighbouring countries. Our annual expenditure has been:

Year	£ million
1994–95	6.0
1995–96	6.666
1996–97	8.14
1997–98	10.067
1998–99	3.371
1999–2000	13.034

Uganda

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department makes available to Uganda to prevent mother to baby transmission of HIV. [137942]

Clare Short: We do not currently provide direct funding for the specific prevention of mother to child transmission of HIV (MTCT) in Uganda. Steps are being taken to establish a programme for dealing with MTCT, led by UNICEF, working closely with the Ministry of Health, the Uganda AIDS Commission and the UNAIDS theme group, of which the Department for International Development is an active member. We are also providing over £2 million in support this financial year to a variety of AIDS related projects and programmes throughout Uganda.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much her Department spent in development and aid in Sierra Leone in (a) 1999 and (b) so far this year; and what the financial support spent on war. [138018]

Clare Short: Development expenditure by the Department for International Development in Sierra Leone in 1999–2000 amounted to £29,914,000. Development expenditure for Sierra Leone so far this year totals £13,645,000. Final expenditure figures will not be available until next summer. Development funds have not been used to support the war against the Sierra Leone rebel factions.

HIV/AIDS (Caribbean)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the prevalence of HIV/AIDS in the Caribbean and the support the UK is providing to local health organisations there. [137737]

Clare Short: Recent reports indicate that HIV prevalence in the Caribbean is now second only to sub-Saharan Africa. The Caribbean also has the highest AIDS incidence rate in the Americas. HIV/AIDS is already the leading cause of death in the 15–44 age group within the region.

We are supporting the work of the Caribbean Epidemiology Centre (CAREC) in its response to the HIV/AIDS epidemic. We are funding the second phase (£713,564) of a project aimed at the Prevention and Control of AIDS and Sexually Transmitted Diseases. This focuses on strengthening the management of public health information strategies for HIV/AIDS, cost-effective STD/HIV/AIDS case management, and improved surveillance systems for STDs and HIV/AIDS within Caribbean countries.

We are currently examining what further support should be provided to a CARICOM-sponsored regional plan of action for tackling HIV/AIDS in the Caribbean, as presented at a regional conference held in Barbados in September.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Human Rights Commission

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what attempts are made by the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission to identify or assess the perceived (a) political and (b) religious affiliation of persons seeking assistance from the Commission; [136520]

(2) if he will list the occasions on which the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission has initiated proceedings, the nature of each such case and the reference number and names of the persons concerned; [136523]

(3) what efforts are made by the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission to encourage applications for assistance in bringing a case from sections of the community which are presently under-represented in the number of applications for assistance; [136521]

(4) if he will list the applications made to the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission for assistance to bring a case, the cost of such assistance in each case in which assistance was given, and also show the cases in which requests for assistance were refused and the reasons for refusal in each case; [136519]

(5) if he will publish the criteria used by the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission for giving assistance to an individual to bring a case; [136518]

(6) on how many occasions the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission has assisted individuals in bringing cases; what is the reference number of the cases and the names of the individuals concerned; and by what means the outcome of the cases was brought to the attention of the general public; [136517]

(7) if he will list the occasions on which the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission has intervened in existing proceedings, indicating the nature of the cases, the names of those involved and the reference number. [136522]

Mr. George Howarth: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission which is an independent body. I have therefore asked the Chief Commissioner of the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission to write to the hon. Member. A copy of his letter will be placed in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ministerial Directions

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer from the Chief Secretary to the Treasury of 23 October 2000, Official Report, columns 73–76W, on ministerial directions, if he will place in the Library the text and supporting documentation of the directions made by Ministers in his Department in 1998 and 2000; and if he will make a statement. [137299]

Mr. Caborn: I have considered this request under the terms of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information and concluded that providing this information would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion within government. The request therefore falls within the term of exemption 2 of the Code of Practice.

Oil and Gas Directorate

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to (a) relocate his Department's oil and gas directorate employment to Aberdeen and (b) create additional oil and gas jobs, indicating where the jobs will be located. [137336]

Mrs. Liddell: My Oil and Gas Directorate maintains offices in both Aberdeen and London, reflecting operational needs. There are no plans to change this.

In the last three years the number of posts located in Aberdeen has risen from 56.3 to 72.3; a further 14 posts have been transferred from my Department to the Inland Revenue's Aberdeen office. This reflects our policy of maintaining a substantial operational presence in Aberdeen. The future staffing of Oil and Gas Directorate is currently under review.

SMEs (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many small and medium enterprises failed by constituency in Wales and England in the last 12 months. [137716]

Ms Hewitt: There are no official statistics on the number of small and medium enterprise failures by constituency.

When a County court hears an insolvency petition they allocate the case to the nearest Official Receiver's office. It is the location of the Official Receiver's office that is recorded, not the location of the business.

There were 5,037 insolvencies in England and Wales from 1 October 1999 to 30 September 2000, the latest 12 months available.

ADSL Services

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will require suppliers of ADSL services to specify to consumers a maximum and minimum expected contention ratio; and if he will make a statement. [138328]

Ms Hewitt: Contention ratio is one of a number of fundamental quality of service parameters used to specify ADSL service products, as are other parameters such as data rates and throughput. It is generally accepted that service quality and cost are related and this is certainly true for ADSL services.

It is likely that contention ratio information will be provided by ADSL service suppliers as part of their service contract with the customers and indeed customers may well request this information if it is not readily available. It is also expected that ADSL service suppliers will offer customers a choice of throughput offerings so that customers will be able to choose which quality performance offering best meets their needs.

It is therefore for market forces to determine which services consumers are likely to demand and what price consumers are willing to pay for such services based on the overall service quality package.

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137438]

Mr. Byers: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 531W.

I fully support the aims of the International Year of Volunteers. Everyone benefits from volunteering and the Prime Minister has issued a challenge to employers to give their employees paid time off to work in the community.

My Department fully intends to take up the Prime Minister's challenge. An article to be published in the staff newspaper early in the new year will announce that all staff have the right to take one day's paid special leave per year to take part in voluntary activities in their community. This is in addition to the provisions that already exist to allow staff paid time off for voluntary activities.

I personally intend to spend a day, working as a volunteer in my own constituency, during 2001.

Deregulation

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 30 October 2000, Official Report, column 228W, on deregulation, what progress his Department has made in identifying the statement referred to and the evidence on which it is based. [138409]

Ms Hewitt: The statement to which I now understand this and the previous question refers is that "Government continues to reduce the burdens caused by too much regulation." It appears in two publications published by the Small Business Service—"Setting up in Business: A Guide to Regulatory Requirements" and "Employing Staff: A Guide to Regulatory Requirements." It also appears on the Small Business Service website.

There is considerable evidence for the statement. For example, the Government have increased the threshold below which small companies may opt to dispense with having their annual accounts audited from a turnover of £350,000 to a turnover of £1,000,000. This measure alone will produce annual savings of around £90 million for about 75,000 companies. In addition, the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his pre-budget statement has proposed a major overhaul of the VAT system to reduce the administrative burden on small firms. The Federation of Small Businesses said it was > ... delighted with the proposals outlined by the Chancellor on VAT, saying reforms would provide greater simplicity and ease cash flow problems for small firms.

A number of other measures to reduce burdens are in the pipeline, including reform of the liquor licensing and gambling laws. Further evidence for the statement is the report by the OECD last year that the UK had the lowest level of product market regulation while the CBI has reported that the UK has more flexible labour market regulation than other European countries.

Sugar Regime

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is (a) the current and (b) the forecast level of restitution payments in each of the EU countries in respect of sugar export. [137549]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

The following table provides details of export refunds on sugar in each member state for 1998–99. The Commission's latest estimate for the EU's 2000–01 budget is 1,210 million euros for the EU as a whole. No forecast figures per member state are available, as the breakdown of expenditure depends on the port of export.

Member state	Expenditure on export refunds 1998–99 (million euro)	Percentage by member state
Austria	14	1
Belgium	299	19
Denmark	96	6
Finland	7	0
France	488	31
Germany	235	15
Greece	4	0
Ireland	5	0
Italy	153	10
Netherlands	34	2
Portugal	31	2
Spain	49	3
Sweden	22	1
UK	154	10
Total	1,591	100

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the British sugar industry regarding the proposed new sugar regime; and if he will make a statement. [137590]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

As at 10 November written responses to the Ministry's consultation letter of 6 October have been received from British Sugar plc and the Tenant Farmers Association. In addition, a wide range of interests participated in a consultation meeting on 23 October. Copies of the written comments will in due course be made available in the Ministry's library at Whitehall Place.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the total UK consumption of sugar is satisfied by (a) home production, (b) imports from former colonies and (c) other sources. [137606]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

The following table indicates the proportion of the total UK consumption of sugar satisfied by each source for the July 1999 to June 2000 marketing year. Home sugar beet production refers to sugar produced within quota only, and does not include over-quota sugar.

Percentage

Source	Proportion of UK consumption
a) Home sugar beet production	53
b) African, Caribbean, Pacific States and India	40
c) Other sources	7

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Access to Work

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to inform small and medium sized enterprises about the Access to Work scheme. [135841]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 31 October 2000]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mark Neale to Mr. Tim Boswell, dated 14 November 2000:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked Leigh Lewis to reply to your question concerning the steps being taken to inform small and medium sized enterprises of the Access to Work scheme. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying on his behalf.

In answer to your specific question, it is encouraging to know that half of the employees who apply for support from the Access to Work scheme work for organisations which employ fewer than 500 people. The Employment Service already invests around £300,000 per year in marketing and publicising its disability services and programmes, through a variety of media including external advertising, exhibitions and marketing events, video and information leaflets, which are available through all Jobcentres. This includes leaflets specifically aimed at employers. Our own promotion is reinforced by a wide range of other organisations, particularly in the voluntary sector, who represent disabled people. We collaborate with them to help publicise Access to Work and our other support for disabled people and employers seeking to employ people with disabilities.

I am also pleased to be able to tell you that the Employment Service is relaunching its website this autumn. This relaunch will include fuller information about disability services, including much more information about Access to Work for employers and individuals.

Our promotion of the Access to Work scheme is reflected in growing demand for it. In round figures, 13,000 disabled people were supported in 97–98, 16,000 in 98–99, and 21,000 in 99–2000.

I hope this is helpful.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the progress made by his Department since 1999 in reducing sickness absence; what targets he has agreed with the Cabinet Office; and if he will make a statement. [135468]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 30 October 2000]: In 1999, the overall sickness absence rate in the Department for Education and Employment (including the Employment Service) was 10.6 days per staff year. We have agreed targets with the Cabinet Office to reduce this to 9.6 days by 2001, and 8.3 days by 2003. The Department is making significant efforts to meet these challenging targets.

Asset Management Data

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by (a) authority and (b) as a total, the results of the asset management plan condition data surveys, breaking the data down according to each of the four levels of priority, as required by the Department. [136751]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 6 November 2000]: We are collecting and validating the data and will publish them next year.

New Deal (Hendon)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many clients of the New Deal in Hendon in each New Deal category have (a) found a job, (b) found a subsidised job, (c) found training and (d) found work on an environmental task force. [136951]

Ms Jowell: The following table shows latest figures (to the end of August 2000) for the number of young people gaining jobs from the New Deal for Young People in Hendon parliamentary constituency.

In answer to (a)-(d), figures on starts to each New Deal option are shown. All options include an element of training

Type of option	Number
Employment option	19
Full time education/training	148
Voluntary sector	31
Environment task force	8
Total into options	206
Number into jobs	347

Special Educational Needs

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance has been issued to adjudicators and school organisation committees on the policy of inclusion for children statemented with special educational needs. [137229]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 7 November 2000]: In March 2000 the Department issued guidance on statutory proposals for changes in schools. This included guidance for adjudicators and school organisation committees on the factors to be considered when determining proposals for the reorganisation of special schools and special educational needs provision in mainstream schools.

The following extract highlights factors to be considered in relation to standards of provision:

whether the proposals will enable pupils' special educational needs to be met whether the proposals will improve educational standards in the area

how the proposals will support increased inclusion

whether the proposals will improve standards of accommodation whether the proposals will ensure the delivery of a broad and balanced curriculum including all the elements of a basic curriculum how the proposals will address any specific health, safety and welfare requirements how the proposal will contribute to the efficient use of resources the impact of the proposal on other special educational needs provision within the area.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research his Department has undertaken into the loss of SEN teachers due to increased delegation of spending by LEAs. [138029]

Jacqui Smith: The Department has not commissioned research specifically into the effect of increased delegation of funding to schools on teachers employed in LEA central services. We have, however, jointly funded with NASEN research to look at the ways in which SEN Support Services are developing. The early findings from this work suggests that posts are increasing or remaining stable in the vast majority of LEAs. A final report on this research will be published early in 2001.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on the questions of whether statements of special needs should in future (a) specify or (b) otherwise set out assistance from a local authority in the proposed code and regulations on special needs. [138323]

Jacqui Smith: We have received representations from a range of individuals, parents' groups, voluntary organisations, and some hon. Members.

Holocaust Memorial Day

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what measures his Department is taking to publicise the Holocaust Memorial Day Education Pack; and if he will make a statement; [137631]

(2) what measures his Department has taken to distribute copies of the Holocaust Memorial Day Education Pack to schools and colleges; and if he will make a statement; [137632]

(3) what guidance his Department has issued to schools and colleges on how to commemorate Holocaust Memorial Day; and if he will make a statement. [137633]

Jacqui Smith: The Holocaust Memorial Day (HMD) Education Pack was launched on 9 November as part of the build up to the Holocaust Memorial Day on 27 January. The Pack has been publicised through the Department's Spectrum publication which goes to all schools, and through the HMD website run by the Home Office.

The Pack has been produced by a working group of experts from non-government organisations who have a vast range of experience and knowledge in the area of holocaust education, including the Holocaust Education Trust who, on behalf of the working group, are making the Pack available to all schools. I am very grateful to all those organisations who have been involved in its production. Members of the national and community press, a number of survivors and representatives from those organisations involved in the Pack were present at the launch.

The Pack is a valuable cross-curricular resource and includes a number of suggestions for activities and assemblies to support the commemoration of the Memorial Day.

Carlisle Jobcentre

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made in the relocation of the jobcentre in Carlisle; and if he will make a statement. [137709]

Ms Jowell: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Mr. Eric Martlew, dated 13 November 2000:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked Leigh Lewis to reply to your question concerning the progress of plans to relocate Carlisle Jobcentre. This is something which falls within responsibilities delegated to Mr Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying in his absence.

We have been asked to vacate the premises we now occupy in Lowther House. Our estates team are involved in commercial negotiations to lease alternative premises which will meet the needs of all our customers. We are exploring a number of options in the city centre.

I will provide you with details of premises once negotiations have been concluded.

I hope this is helpful.

Teachers' PRP

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to open up teachers' performance-related pay threshold training and external assessment procedures to special service establishments which wish to mirror the threshold system in payments to their staff. [137851]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 13 November 2000]: We are currently considering what support we might give to educational establishments who are interested in mirroring the threshold assessment procedures for their teaching staff. We are consulting on a new provision for the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document to allow such assessments, if carried out in accordance with the system explained in the document, to count in maintained schools.

Value for Money Unit

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement about the work of the Value for Money Unit in his Department. [137912]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Value for Money Unit was set up last year to give advice on various aspects of value for money in schools. The Unit works on enabling schools to benchmark their expenditure against similar schools; conducts and sponsors research on the effect of resources on educational outcomes; provides good practice guidance for schools; and advises schools and LEAs about best value in education.

Out-of-hours School Activities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what support his Department is offering for out-of-hours school activities. [138063]

Jacqui Smith: Out of school hours learning activities are high on this Government's education agenda. We believe that all young people can benefit from these additional opportunities to learn and succeed. In addition to the £205 million of lottery money available through the New Opportunities Fund for these activities, my Department has made available, through the Standards Fund, £20 million this financial year and £60 million for 2001–02.

My Department is also running a two-year, £2.5 million programme of partnership projects between schools and a wide range of partner organisations, such as businesses and youth, community and voluntary organisations. The 138 projects in the programme will focus on engendering partnership and on evaluating the benefits for both schools and partners.

In addition, the Department has published a wide range of practical guidance and good practice example for providers of out of school hours learning activities; most recently the "Study Support Toolkit", a suite of good practice and training materials, and "Safe Keeping", a good practice guide for health and safety in out of school hours learning activities.

European Institutions

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the (a) purpose and (b) running cost of (i) the European Centre for the Development of Vocational Training, (ii) the European Foundation for the Improvement of Living and Working Conditions and (iii) the European Training Foundation. [138079]

Mr. Wicks: The three organisations referred to are agencies of the European Union.

European Centre for the Development of Vocational Training.

The purpose of the Centre is to provide information on member states' vocational education and training systems. It promotes and supports research on specific education and training themes, produces descriptive reports and identifies developmental trends of interest to member states and the European Commission.

In 2000 the running costs of the organisation are 12.9 million Euros.

European Foundation for the Improvement of Living and Working Conditions

The Foundation was established to provide policy makers with research-based information on the improvement of living and working conditions. This includes comparative cross-European research on employment and unemployment, equal opportunities, social inclusion, health in the workplace and employee relations. As well as commissioning research through open tender the Foundation is active in disseminating research-based information through publications, conferences and seminars throughout the member states.

In 2000 the running costs of the Foundation are 15 million Euros.

European Training Foundation.

The purpose of the Foundation is to act as a centre of expertise in human resource development to assist the countries of central and eastern Europe, the new independent states and non EU Mediterranean countries. It provides analysis and advice to these countries on vocational education and training, disseminates information on EU best practice, assists in the design and development of vocational education and training projects and in monitoring and evaluation of initiatives in these countries. The Foundation is playing a particularly active role in assisting those countries seeking accession to the European Union to develop their vocational education and training expertise.

In 2000 the running costs of the Foundation are 16.2 million Euros.

Jeff Joseph Sale Moor Technology College

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when officials from the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority will meet the headteacher of the Jeff Joseph Sale Moor Technology College to discuss the proposed development of an ICT training course. [138169]

Mr. Wills: Officials of the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) would be pleased to meet with the headteacher of Jeff Joseph Sale Moor Technology College. Officials of the Department for Education and Employment, with colleagues at QCA, will arrange a meeting.

EU Council of Ministers

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the outcome of the Education/Youth Council held in Luxembourg on 9 November; and if he will make a statement. [138396]

Mr. Wills: Jane Davidson AM, Minister for Education and Lifelong Learning and I represented the UK at the Council of EC Education/Youth Ministers in Brussels on 9 November. Education Ministers gave political approval to a common position on a recommendation on mobility within the Community for students, persons undergoing training, volunteers, teachers and instructors. Political approval was also given to a Mixed Resolution containing a Mobility Action Plan. The Plan sets out a number of measures, which member states can select from according to national circumstances, to promote the mobility of teachers, academics, students and volunteers across Europe.

Ministers discussed a preliminary draft report on the future objectives of education systems. Council agreed that the report, which is to be presented by the Education Ministers to the Stockholm European Council in spring 2001, should aim to identify objectives and priorities common to education systems within member states and facilitate the sharing of information and exchange of good and best practice at a national level.

The Council adopted two opinions for the Employment and Social Policy Council on the Social Policy Agenda and draft employment guidelines.

Ministers received reports from the Commission and Presidency on: the conclusions of the Leiden seminar, organised by the Netherlands and French Presidency, on open methods of co-ordination and benchmarking of European education systems; follow up to the meeting of the EU and Latin American Ministers for Higher Education in Paris on 3 November; a memorandum on life-long learning; progress reached in the implementation of the European Year of Languages 2001; the renewal of the United States—Canada—EU co-operation agreements in the field of education and training and; the outcome of the Blois seminar entitled "Learn the history of Europe".

Youth Ministers held an open debate on the follow-up measures which should be taken following earlier consultations with young people in Europe. Council agreed the importance of involving young people at European level and the need to create regular opportunities for consulting with young people—including those not affiliated to recognised youth networks—at both national and European level. The debate was part of the Commission's consultation process linked to developing a White Paper on the future of youth policy.

Ministers received information from the Commission on the implementation of the Youth Programme and adopted a resolution on the social inclusion of young people.

The Presidency and the Commission raised the issue of the potential dangers facing young sportsmen and women through over-training, drug abuse and commercial exploitation. The Commission urged the Council to consider taking action to tackle this.

The Council heard a report from the German delegation on the need to tackle the problem of racism and xenophobia among young people.

A copy of the Council Minutes will be placed in the Library in due course.

HEALTH

Ehlers-Danlos Syndrome

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recent representations he has received about Ehlers-Danlos syndrome; and what provision exists in the NHS for specialist clinical and research facilities for this condition; [135880]

(2) what recent discussions he has had with the Minister of Health in the Welsh Assembly about provision for Ehlers-Danlos Syndrome. [136384]

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the NHS's treatment of sufferers of Ehlers-Danlos Syndrome. [136998]

Mr. Denham: The Department has received recent correspondence about the Connective Tissue Genetics Group (CTGG), which is based at the Institute of Medical Genetics in Cardiff.

The provision of treatment for Ehlers-Danlos Syndrome patients is part of the responsibility of health authorities who must make arrangements for the health of their population as they are closest to the people they serve and so best placed to respond sensitively to their needs.

There have been no recent discussions with the Minister of Health in the Welsh Assembly about EDS services. The National Specialist Commissioning Advisory Group (NSCAG) advises health ministers in England on the identification and funding of services where central intervention into local commissioning of patient services is necessary. NSCAG is working closely with the Specialised Health Services Commission (SHSC) for Wales to consider a national clinical EDS service that includes services of all current providers.

The Medical Research Council (MRC) has been providing research funding to the CTGG as a five year programme grant that is due to be completed in November 2000. The MRC would consider any new application for further research funding from CTGG. The MRC always welcomes high quality applications for support and these are judged in open competition with other demands on funding. Awards are made according to their scientific quality and importance to human health.

Chief Dental Officer

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what grounds the former Chief Dental Officer took early retirement. [137574]

Mr. Hutton: Personnel records relating to public employment remain confidential under the terms of Part 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Fungal Infection Treatment

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of research into treatment with synthetic human antibodies in order to counter deadly fungal infections; and if he will make a statement. [137412]

Mr. Denham: The Medicines Control Agency has recently assessed an application to conduct a clinical trial designed to evaluate the use of a synthetic human antibody in the treatment of disseminated fungal infection.

Secure Units (Suicides)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children and young people committed suicide in local authority secure units in each of the last 10 years. [137811]

Mr. Hutton: One child committed suicide in 1998. There have been no other suicides in local authority secure accommodation in the last 10 years.

Acute Hospital Beds

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many acute hospital beds there are in the Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth Health Authority area. [137795]

Mr. Denham: During 1999–2000 Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth Health Authority had on average 1,418 beds available. Since last December, the local health community has opened an additional 89 beds for this winter.

Agency Nurses

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many agency nurses were employed in the NHS, and at what total cost, in each year since 1979 for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [137120]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is given in the table.

Waiting Times (North Cumbria)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on out-patient waiting times in the North Cumbria Health Authority. [137710]

Mr. Denham: The latest information for North Cumbria Health Authority for the quarter ending 30 June 2000 demonstrates that 82 per cent. of North Cumbria residents with a written referral from a general practitioner were seen within 13 weeks and that 98 per cent. were seen within 26 weeks.

Child Migrants

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department has taken in respect of the welfare of former British child migrants since the publication of his Department's response to the Third report of the Health Committee, Session 1997–98, HC 755; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of such measures. [138171]

Mr. Hutton: In the Government's response to the Health Select Committee's Report on the Welfare of Former Child Migrants, a commitment was given to provide practical help to former child migrants.

We agreed to increase funding for the Child Migrants Trust to £500,000 over three years (1999–2002) to assist former child migrants in tracing their relatives and also to provide counselling services.

It has also set up a Support Fund (£1 million over three years managed by International Social Services) to enable first time re-unions between former child migrants and their immediate relatives in the United Kingdom through paying travel and subsistence cost. The International Social Services (ISS) have so far received 209 applications, of which 181 have been successful.

We have also funded a central information index to help child migrants trace their roots. The Index was installed in November 1999 and to date they have received 181 applications.

Departmental officials met with the Agent General for Western Australia, Clive Griffiths on 17 August 2000 formally to receive a copy of the Western Australian Former Child Migrant Referral Index. This Department reciprocated by handing over those records from the UK Central Information Index which were specific to Western Australia. We will continue to work with Australian colleagues to ensure that maximum benefit is derived for child migrants from the information held on the Index.

Although no specific assessment has been made of the effectiveness of these measures the Child Migrants Trust and International Social Services along with the National Council for Voluntary Child Care Organisations, who set up the Child Migrant Information Index provide my officials with regular progress reports on the services they are supplying.

Bed Blocking (Suffolk)

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital beds are being blocked by patients fit enough to be moved out of hospital (a) in the Suffolk Health Authority and (b) in the West Suffolk NHS Hospital Trust. [138411]

Ms Stuart: The quarterly monitoring figures for second quarter of 2000 show that Suffolk Health Authority had 165 patients over the age of 75, who were ready for discharge but still occupying a hospital bed.

Source: Common Information Core Quarterly monitoring returns based on health authority quarterly activity.

Out-patient Waiting Times

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on variations by region for out-patient waiting times and referral arrangements. [137265]

Mr. Denham: We are aware of variations in out-patient waiting times and are working to improve matters. In July each acute National Health Service trust in the country received a "Step-by-step guide to improving out-patient services", a copy of which is available in the Library. At the same time Trusts were instructed to introduce partial booking systems into clinics with waits in excess of 13 weeks. These systems improve the efficiency of out-patient clinics and reduce long waiting times. We have also recently announced further details of our "Action On" programme, with funding targeted at specialties with the longest waits—orthopaedics, ear nose and throat, dermatology and ophthalmology (cataracts).

To make the best use of resources it is important that only patients who need to see a consultant are referred to hospital. All acute NHS trusts are implementing Out-patient Improvement Plans which include schemes to improve the appropriateness of referrals through collaborative working between hospital consultants and general practitioners. In addition, the National Institute for Clinical Excellence and the shadow Modernisation Agency are piloting a guide to appropriate referral from general to specialist services for common medical conditions.

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of new patients referred to medical, surgical, oncological, obstetric, gynaecological and other out-patient clinics in the West Surrey health authority were seen by (a) a consultant in the discipline and (b) a junior doctor, in the last year for which figures are available. [137266]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne) on 10 November 2000, Official Report, columns 432–33W.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falkland Islands

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit the Falkland Islands. [136397]

Mr. Battle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence visited the islands in March this year, and I hope to arrange a visit in the new year.

Saint Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions on which the Governor of Saint Helena took executive action without the approval of the island's Legislative Council in each of the last two years, indicating those occasions on which prior consultation with his Department took place. [137343]

Mr. Battle: The Governor of St. Helena has used his reserved power under Section 34(1) of the St. Helena Constitution Order on two occasions in the past two years; 31 March 1998 and 31 March 1999. On each occasion he used his powers, on the advice of the Executive Council, to implement the budget after the Legislative Council had refused to pass it. He acted properly in line with the Constitution and with the full support of the Department on each occasion.

Iraq

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his estimate is of the value of humanitarian goods the UN Sanctions Committee is currently holding back from delivery to Iraq. [137681]

Mr. Hain: The total revenue available under the Oil for Food programme since its inception in 1996 is over US$37 billion. This year alone, Oil for Food revenue is expected to reach more than US$16 billion. The current value of Oil for Food contracts on hold because of concerns over dual use is approximately US$2.3 billion. The UK accounts for about US$0.3 billion of this, which is less than 1 per cent. of the total value of Oil for Food revenue. The UK, as a responsible member of the UN Iraq Sanctions Committee, scrutinises contracts very carefully to ensure that goods are not supplied to Iraq in violation of Security Council resolutions. Holds are normally lifted after assurances have been received about the end-use or in-country monitoring of these goods. It is noteworthy that at the end of October Iraq's bureaucracy was holding back the delivery of US$1.1 billion worth of goods already approved by the Sanctions Committee.

Tibet

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received in respect of the Chinese occupation of Tibet. [137922]

Mr. Battle: The Government continue to regularly receive representations from hon. Members, non-governmental organisations and members of the public about the situation in Tibet.

Ministerial Visits

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit (a) Peking and (b) North Korea. [137924]

Mr. Battle: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no plans at present to visit either China or North Korea.

Kursk Submarine

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 536W, what representations he has made to Russia in respect of claims that a British submarine was involved in the Kursk disaster. [137927]

Mr. Vaz: The Secretary of State made no representations to Russia in respect of claims that a British submarine was involved in the Kursk disaster. The Secretary of State for Defence, who led on this issue, has already assured the Russian Defence Minister, that there were no Royal Navy submarines in the area at the time the Kursk sank.

China

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his assessment is of the human rights situation in (a) the People's Republic of China and (b) Hong Kong. [137923]

Mr. Battle: While there has been some improvement in economic and social rights in China, the overall situation continues to be a matter of serious concern. Over the last two years there has been a marked deterioration in the respect for key civil and political rights including freedoms of assembly, conscience and expression. Fair treatment in the legal process is routinely abused through the use of arbitrary detention, "re-education through Labour" and excessive sentences against democracy activists, Falun Gong Leaders, Tibetan and other activists. We address these concerns through a policy of critical dialogue including Ministerial exchanges and regular bilateral human rights talks with the Chinese.

Arms Exports (Israel)

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence Her Majesty's Government have obtained that components or equipment licensed for export to Israel by the United Kingdom Government since 1990 have not been used by Israeli forces (a) against civilians in the Occupied Territories and (b) in Southern Lebanon. [138006]

Mr. Hain: We have no evidence that equipment licensed for export to Israel by this Government has been used against civilians in the Occupied Territories or in southern Lebanon in defiance of our strict controls. The Government have, however, long had concerns that CS gas exported from the UK has been used by the Israeli Security Forces against Palestinians and Israeli Arabs. Consequently, since taking office, the Government have refused all applications for permanent licences to export CS gas to Israel.

CFSP Headquarters (Thefts)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent thefts from the CFSP Headquarters in the Justis Lipsius building; what classified material (a) was and (b) is to be stored in that location; and if he will make a statement. [137900]

Mr. Vaz: The UK Representation to the European Communities has made inquiries into this matter with the European Council Secretariat. The Council Secretariat was satisfied that there had been no thefts of classified documents from the CFSP section of the Justus Lipsius building.

The Directorate General for External Affairs, located in the Justus Lipsius building, holds documents relating to council business in the field of external relations, including CFSP and European Defence.

Armed Forces (European Communities)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the operational status is of armed forces personnel on assignment to the European Communities; and if he will list the personnel concerned. [138088]

Mr. Vaz: There are no armed forces personnel on operational assignments with the European Communities. However, as agreed at the Helsinki and Lisbon European Councils, the United Kingdom, along with other EU member states, has sent national experts to the Council Secretariat to give military advice as required on the European Security and Defence Policy in the interim period. The UK currently has two officers working in this capacity.

Foreign Policy Centre

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met representatives of the Foreign Policy Centre; and if he will make a statement on the nature of contacts between his staff and the Centre. [138184]

Mr. Robin Cook: It is established practice for Foreign Office Ministers and officials to have regular contact with policy institutes and NGOs, including the Foreign Policy Centre, to consider their views when developing policy, and to contribute to the debates initiated by them.

Parliamentary Powers

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a command paper listing the matters ceded by Parliament to the European Community and Union since 1 January 1973 broken down under the headings of (a) legislation, (b) taxation, (c) expenditure and appropriation, (d) adjudication and (e) the negotiation of political and commercial agreements with other states. [138034]

Mr. Vaz: Each Treaty amending the EU Treaties has been presented to Parliament in the form of a command paper. I refer my hon. Friend to these.

European Union Reform

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the progress report on the IGC on institutional reform (CONFER 4790/00). [138215]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the website www.europa.eu.int where he will find all the official documents relating to the intergovernmental conference.

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137428]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 13 November 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 531W.

We fully support the aims of the International Year of Volunteers. The Prime Minister has issued a challenge to employers to give their employees paid time off to work in the community. The FCO has implemented policies to encourage this and now approves one day's paid leave a year for employees to undertake voluntary work. The voluntary spirit is very much alive in the FCO and helps animate much of our work. The Foreign Secretary intends to participate during 2001.

EU Charter of Fundamental Rights

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposed EU Charter of Fundamental Rights on the administration of justice in England and Wales. [136363]

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of the draft Charter of Fundamental Rights on the administration of the court system. [136351]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Stone (Mr. Cash) on 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 555W.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the security situation in the Democratic Republic of Congo; and what actions are being taken by the Government to bring an end to hostilities there. [138341]

Mr. Hain: We remain deeply concerned about the security situation in the DRC. The UN Security Council has repeatedly called on all parties to the conflict to cease hostilities and to fulfil their obligations under the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement. Bilaterally, we have registered our concerns with all parties through our Special Representative who has just returned from an extensive visit to the region.

Trade (EU Market Access)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what impact the effect of the EC's Everything but Arms initiative will have on negotiations between the EC and WTO members for a new banana regime. [136829]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

The Commission's proposal to amend the Generalised System of Preferences (GSP) for Least Developed Countries (LDCs) allows for a three year phasing-in period of tariff and quota free access for bananas. The UK continues to work for the achievement of a rapid solution to the WTO banana dispute which is acceptable within the WTO and addresses the needs of Caribbean producers. We will work to ensure that pursuit of this solution and the proposal for amendment of the GSP Regulation are consistent.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what impact extension of unlimited duty and quota free access to the EU market for large least developed country sugar producers will have on the EU agricultural budget and excess EU production and intervention costs. [136828]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

The UK is pressing for this to be fully assessed in the context of the consideration given to the Commission's separate proposals on the reform of the EU sugar regime. It will depend on the amount of sugar that least developed countries send to the EU. The EU already has a substantial sugar surplus, and the only tools in the current regime to deal with an increase are intervention buying and/or cuts in EU quotas.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what impact the European Commission's proposals to provide duty and quota free access to the EU market to 48 least developed countries will have on EC proposals for the reform of the EU sugar and rice regimes. [136826]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

The Government believe that there is potential inconsistency between the European Commission's proposals for duty free access for sugar and rice from least developed countries and their parallel proposals for reform of the EU sugar and rice regimes. We have pressed for the impact of the LDC proposal to be properly discussed in the context of the reform proposals in the Agriculture Council.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Lone Parents

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of people living in lone parent families in each year since 1995 were (a) in the bottom 30 per cent., (b) in the bottom 40 per cent. and (c) in the bottom 50 per cent. of the income distribution. [134544]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Proportion of individuals living in lone parent families below various percentiles of the income distribution

Individuals below percentiles of income distribution (percentage)/year	Including self-employed		Excluding self-employed
	Before housing costs	After housing costs	Before housing costs	After housing costs
Bottom 30 per cent.
1995–96	59	67	59	67
1996–97	65	71	63	70
1997–98	63	69	63	69
1998–99	63	69	63	69
Bottom 40 per cent.
1995–96	73	78	73	78
1996–97	78	81	77	81
1997–98	76	79	76	79
1998–99	77	80	77	80

Proportion of individuals living in lone parent families below various percentiles of the income distribution

Individuals below percentiles of income distribution (percentage)/year	Including self-employed		Excluding self-employed
	Before housing costs	After housing costs	Before housing costs	After housing costs
Bottom 50 per cent.
1995–96	83	85	83	86
1996–97	86	87	86	87
1997–98	84	85	84	86
1998–99	86	87	85	87

Notes:

1. All figures are estimates and are taken from the Households Below Average Income (HBAI) data set which is derived from the Family Resources Survey (FRS). The FRS does not include Northern Ireland, and 1998–99 is the latest year for which data is available.
2. The estimates are sample counts, which have been adjusted for non-response using multipurpose grossing factors that control for region, Council Tax band and a number of other demographic variables. Estimates are subject to both sampling error and to variability in non-response. All percentages are rounded to the nearest per cent.
3. The income measure used is weekly net (disposable) equivalised household income (that is to say income that is adjusted to reflect the composition of the household). While the proportion of individuals below various income thresholds may be sensitive to the precise way in which incomes are equivalised, changes shown over time generally are not.
4. The estimates are presented on both a Before Housing Costs (BHC) and an After Housing Costs (AHC) basis in line with HBAI conventions. Figures are also provided including and excluding the self-employed, as research suggests that, for self-employed people, income as reported in surveys is often a poor indicator of living standards.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what the average claim period for Incapacity Benefit has been; and how many people have left the caseload, broken down by destination in each year since 1995; [134586]

(2) what proportion of people who stopped claiming Incapacity Benefit, in the last 12 months for which figures are available, did so because they were returning to work, broken down into those who have claimed Incapacity Benefit for (a) less than a year, (b) between one and two years, (c) between two and three years, (d) between three and four years, (e) between four and five years, and (f) over five years. [134655]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how long a claimant for Incapacity Benefit has to wait for a medical assessment of their capabilities. [137520]

Mr. Bayley: There is no set time within which the process has to be completed as this will vary according to the individual circumstances of each case. Until the process is complete, the claimant will continue to receive benefit on the basis of their own doctor's certificates.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action his Department is taking to devise a system to enable recipients of incapacity benefits to return to work. [138074]

Mr. Bayley: The New Deal for Disabled People, a joint initiative of the Department of Social Security and the Department for Education and Employment, has been testing a range of approaches to help recipients of incapacity benefits return to or take up work. These include a personal adviser service, innovative schemes and pilot benefit changes. By the end of September 2000, over 5,100 people have been helped into work by the New Deal for Disabled People pilots.

On 13 November the two Departments launched a prospectus for the extension of the New Deal for Disabled People. This will involve the establishment of a network of providers, known as job brokers, to offer long-term sick and disabled people on incapacity benefits the support, guidance, and preparation they need to find work; and to match the needs of employers with the skills and potential of long-term sick and disabled people.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications resulted from his Department's most recent campaign to improve the take-up of the Minimum Income Guarantee for pensioners; and how many were successful. [136533]

Mr. Rooker: The campaign is still in progress and the final mailshots out of a total of 2.3 million were sent out on Friday 10 November. Given the scale of the campaign, the numbers of inquiries, applications and decisions change daily. It will be January before we can provide comprehensive figures on the results of the campaign. Approximately half of actual claims made are proving successful.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, by category, the reasons for which applications for the Minimum Income Guarantee have been rejected (a) in total and (b) in each Benefits Agency area. [137875]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is not available. Separate figures as a result of the take up campaign will be available in due course on a national basis. However, preliminary indications are that of those applications that fail, they do so because of excess capital and income. Both of these issues are dealt with in the proposals for the new pension credit, details of which are published in Cm 4900.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have applied to date for information packs for the Minimum Income Guarantee; how many applications have been returned; how many are receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee in (a) Glasgow, Pollok (b) Glasgow and (c) Scotland; and what this figure is as a percentage of the eligible population. [137766]

Mr. Rooker: Not all the information requested is available.

The current Minimum Income Guarantee take-up campaign is still in progress, so as yet we do not have comprehensive details of the total number of successful claims. However, we have had over 600,000 responses and around half of those claims already processed have been successful.

The table gives numbers of pensioners receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee in Scotland, Glasgow and Pollok.

Pensioners receiving the MIG in Scotland, Glasgow and Pollok, May 2000

Thousand

	Number of claimants
Scotland[1]	164.4
City of Glasgow Unitary Authority[1]	32.4
Glasgow Pollok Parliamentary Constituency[1]	3.5

[1] All aged 60 and over

Notes:

1. Pensioners are defined as where the claimant and/or partner are aged 60 or over. The figures may therefore include some claimants aged under 60.
2. Based on 5 per cent. sample therefore subject to sampling error.
3. Caseloads have been rounded to the nearest hundred and are expressed in thousands; percentages are given to one decimal place.
4. Cases are allocated to each Unitary Authority/Parliamentary Constituency by matching the postcode against the 2000 version 1 ONS Postcode Directory.
5. Constituency information represents Constituency boundaries as at May 1997.

Sources:

1. Income Support Statistics Quarterly Enquiry, May 2000.
2. Population estimates unit—ONS mid-term estimates for 1999.

Information on the eligible population in Scotland, Glasgow and Pollok is not available. The Department's statisticians do not judge it possible to produce reliable estimates, of the amount by which benefit is under-claimed, for different parts of Great Britain.

The next annual statistics on the take-up of income-related benefits in Great Britain will be published on 8 December 2000. These will cover the financial year 1998–99.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the Chancellor of the Exchequer's oral statement of 8 November 2000, Official Report, columns 315–27, on the Pre-Budget Statement, if he will estimate the number of pensioners eligible for the Minimum Income Guarantee in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [138281]

Mr. Rooker: As a result of the measures outlined in the pre-Budget report, an estimated 2 million pensioners and their families will benefit in 2000–01; this will increase to 2.2 million in 2001–02.

Note:

Based on 1.6 million current claims to the Minimum Income Guarantee, 1.7 million in 2000–01 and 1.9 million in 2001–02.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment he has made of the effect on tenants of his Department's proposal to restrict the backdating of housing benefit to three months; and if he will make a statement; [137049]

(2) what assessment he has made to the effect of administrative delays on housing benefit awards backdated for more than three months in each of the last three years for which data are available; and if he will make a statement; [137053]

(3) what representations he has received on his Department's proposal to reduce the backdating of housing benefit from 12 months to three months from April 2001; and if he will make a statement; [137047]

(4) what estimate he has made of the total number of people who will be affected by his Department's proposal to restrict the backdating of housing benefit to three months; and how many of those people are (a) of pensionable age, (b) lone parents, (c) disabled and (d) working but still entitled to claim housing benefit; [137048]

(5) what estimate he has made of the cost of his Department's proposal to change the arrangements for the payment of subsidies to local authorities to cover the backdating of housing benefit; [137051]

(6) what estimate he has made of the savings to (a) his Department and (b) local authorities of his Department's proposal to restrict the backdating of housing benefit to three months; [137050]

(7) what assessment he has made of the reasons why claimants have had housing benefit awards backdated for more than three months in each of the last three years for which records have been kept; and if he will make a statement; [137052]

(8) what assessment he has made of the effect of inadequate advice given by statutory agencies resulting in claimants making successful claims to have their housing benefit backdated for over three months in each of the last three years for which data are available; and if he will make a statement. [137054]

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect on (a) rent arrears and (b) homelessness of the Department of Social Security's proposal to restrict the backdating of Housing Benefit to three months from April 2001; and if he will make a statement. [137056]

Angela Eagle: It is not possible to provide reliable estimates of the effects of the proposal to align the Housing Benefit/Council Tax Benefit backdating rules with those of the other income-related benefits. In terms of benefit expenditure, we have estimated that these changes would be broadly cost-neutral because of the interplay between the proposed tighter prescription and the proposed increase in subsidy paid to local authorities.

These proposals have now been considered by the Social Security Advisory Committee (SSAC), and we have received their report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. We have also received the Local Authority Associations (LAAs) responses to our consultation exercise on these proposals. We are considering the responses from the LAA consultation and points raised in SSAC's report very carefully and will make an announcement shortly.

Income Support

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many unemployed people are receiving Income Support amounting to (i) £1 to £50, (ii) £50 to £100, (iii) £100 to £150, (iv) £150 to £200, (v) £200 to £300, (vi) £300 to £400, (vii) £400 to £500 and (viii) £500 and over per week. [137087]

Angela Eagle: Claimants who are unemployed do not receive Income Support. Job Seekers Allowance is paid to those who are actively seeking employment.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people over the age of (a) 60 and (b) 70 years claim Income Support in (i) the constituency of Glasgow, Pollok, (ii) Glasgow and (iii) Scotland; and if he will express these figures as a percentage of the total number of people over (1) 60 and (2) 70 years in each category. [137765]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is included in the table.

Pensioners receiving the MIG in Scotland, Glasgow and Pollok, May 2000

	Number of claimants (thousand)	Percentage of relevant population
Scotland
All aged 60 and over	164.4	15.7
60–69	55.9	11.3
70 and over	108.5	19.7
City of Glasgow Unitary Authority
All aged 60 and over	32.4	27.3
60–69	13.2	24.1
70 and over	19.2	30.0
Glasgow, Pollok parliamentary constituency
All aged 60 and over	3.5	n/a
60–69	1.3	n/a
70 and over	2.2	n/a

Notes:

1. Pensioners are defined as where the claimant, and/or partner are aged 60 or over. The 60–69 age group may therefore include some claimants aged under 60.
2. Based on 5 per cent. sample therefore subject to sampling error.
3. Case loads have been rounded to the nearest hundred and are expressed in thousands, percentages are given to one decimal place.
4. "Percentage of the population" is based on ONS population estimates for mid-term 1999, and represents Income Support claimants as a proportion of the population in Scotland/Glasgow Unitary Authority who are in the relevant age group.
5. Case load as a percentage of the population is not available for Pollok constituency, as population estimates are not available at this level.
6. Cases are allocated to each unitary authority/parliamentary constituency by matching the postcode against the 2000 version 1 ONS postcode directory.
7. Constituency information represents Constituency boundaries as at May 1997.

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the percentage fall in the value of the capital limits in Income Support after taking account of inflation from 1988 to May 1997. [138206]

Mr. Darling: Using the published Rossi price index for September 1988 and May 1997, the capital limits had fallen by 30.6 per cent. in real terms.

Note:

The Index was 106.9 in September 1988, risen to 154.0 in May 1997.

Pensions (Married Women)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received on the provision of independent pensions for married women who have made full pension contributions; and what response he has made to them. [137271]

Mr. Rooker: I am not entirely clear as to what precise information my hon. Friend is seeking. Married women who have made full pension contributions receive a pension in their own right. If they have insufficient qualifying years for a full pension, the pension is reduced proportionally. If it falls below the married woman's pension rate, it can be topped up when their husband retires to a maximum of £40.40, based on their husband's contributions.

Sickness Benefit

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have been assessed as eligible for sickness benefit on grounds of incapacity caused by (a) mental health problems and (b) drug/alcohol dependency in each of the last five years. [137373]

Mr. Bayley: Incapacity Benefit replaced sickness benefit and invalidity benefit on 13 April 1995. Where benefit is awarded, the first primary diagnosis from the medical certificate is recorded according to the international classification of diseases. The most recent information available for awards of incapacity benefit made where the main condition is recorded as being a mental or behavioural disorder or alcohol or drug abuse is given in the table.

Annual periods	Mental and behavioural disorders	Alcohol and drug abuse
1 June 1995 to 31 May 1996	77,900	3,200
1 June 1996 to 31 May 1997	79,100	4,300
1 June 1997 to 31 May 1998	86,100	4,800
1 June 1998 to 31 May 1999	79,600	4,200
1 June 1999 to 31 May 2000	81,000	4,700

Notes:

1. All causes of incapacity are coded using the International Classification of Diseases, 10th Edition. Primary diagnoses of alcohol or drug abuse are normally shown as part of the group under the heading Mental and Behavioural disorders but are shown separately in the above table.
2. Disorders appearing as secondary conditions are not recorded.
3. Figures relate to spells of incapacity benefit commencing in the stated period. More than one spell may relate to the same claimant.
4. 31 May 2000 is the latest date for which information is available.

Source:

These figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample of the benefit computer system and will exclude a small number of clerically held cases. Figures are rounded to the nearest hundred.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual cost of extending Winter Fuel Payments to those under the age of 60 who are in receipt of (a) the middle or higher rate of Disability Living Allowance care component or (b) higher rate of mobility component and who are presently resident within Scotland. [137679]

Mr. Rooker: It is estimated that the extension of Winter Fuel Payments to people in Scotland who are under age 60 and getting Disability Living Allowance higher or middle rate care component or higher rate mobility component would cost around £20 million in the winter of 2000–01. My hon. Friend will be aware that Winter Fuel Payments to people aged 60 and over are not related to receipt of benefits.

Expenditure (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the overall social security bill is for Wales in the last 12 months; and if he will give a breakdown of how the money is spent by constituency. [137715]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the exact form requested. The estimated expenditure on social security benefits for Wales for 1999–2000 (the latest period for which figures are available) is around £5.8 billion. Data showing expenditure by individual constituencies are not available.

Benefit Entitlement

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend the benefit regulations to ensure that people who suffer from long-term illness or disability do not suffer a lower benefit entitlement by virtue of discovering after a trial period in work that they are unable to sustain that work because of the effects of their illness or disability. [137812]

Mr. Bayley: We have already taken action to help such people. In October 1998, we introduced a provision whereby people who had been incapacitated for at least 28 weeks, began work or training within seven days of leaving benefit and notified the Benefits Agency within one month that they had done so, may return to benefit without having to requalify for the higher rates if they leave work or training within a year. The period is extended to two years where the person had been getting disabled persons tax credit or a training allowance while they were in work or training.

Pensions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate for pensioners who are in receipt of income-related benefits but not the Minimum Income Guarantee, how much of the pension increase in April 2001 will be clawed back in loss of benefit; and if he will pass on the full effect of the pensions increase to pensioners receiving Council Tax benefit. [138288]

Mr. Rooker: None.

Duplicate Payments of Benefit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the mainframe problems were in the period before the duplicated payments of Income Support started. [138336]

Mr. Bayley: In the week before the duplicated Income Support payments, there was only one mainframe problem directly impacting Income Support customers. Standard recovery action procedures were invoked.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Affinity contract ensures that any taxpayers' money lost due to errors by the private sector suppliers is recovered by those suppliers. [138334]

Angela Eagle: Under the Department's contracts with EDS (who lead the Affinity Consortium), EDS is accountable for losses accrued to the Department, subject to the limits of liability set out in that contract.

All of the Department's major PFI contracts undergo a rigorous independent test to ensure an appropriate balance of risk between the Department and its suppliers.

Former POWs

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to inform all benefit offices (a) about his statement on compensation for former POWs held by the Japanese and (b) the exemption of this compensation from social security payment regulations. [138337]

Mr. Bayley: The contents of a War Pensions Agency press release, which summarises the statement made on 7 November by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence, and which explains how claims to the Agency for the ex-gratia payment should be made, have been made available to all benefit office staff.

Subject to normal consultation with the Social Security Advisory Committee and the local authority associations, we intend to amend the income-related benefit regulations in advance of the ex-gratia payments being made. As is normal practice, guidance will be issued to local offices 23 days in advance of the legislation coming into effect.

Social Security Spending (OECD Countries)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of gross domestic product in each OECD country is spent on matters which within the UK are the responsibility of his Department. [137541]

Angela Eagle: The OECD publishes comparative information on public social expenditure in its social expenditure database. There is no accurate way to strip out non-social security expenditure so as to arrive at a DSS-equivalent figure.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual amount of benefit fraud in the United Kingdom in each year since 1992. [137129]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is not available because there was no robust measurement of the level of benefit fraud before 1995.

We have now instituted a regular series of measurement exercises to provide an up to date estimate of the level of fraud in Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance. The results of this exercise are published regularly by the Government Statistical Service.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Dome

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement about the awarding of contracts for the contents of the Millennium Dome to a company headed by Mr. Tim Pyne. [135017]

Janet Anderson: This matter is currently under investigation by the New Millennium Experience Company and the police. It is not therefore possible to comment at this stage. A statement will be made to the House in due course.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions have taken place between officials in his Department and Lord Falconer, the Minister of State, Cabinet Office regarding the report of the National Audit Office on the Millennium Dome. [137841]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 10 November 2000]: National Audit Office (NAO) reports are routinely circulated in draft to the Accounting Officers of all parties concerned, and comments are requested to ensure factual accuracy. Comments on factual accuracy from my Department, incorporating those from Ministers, including the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, were passed on to the team drafting the National Audit Office Report.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the party planned for the Millennium Dome on 31 December, indicating the financial arrangements agreed between the New Millennium Experience Company and the Ministry of Sound. [135325]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 30 October 2000]: The Dome will open to the public from 9.00 a.m. to 6.00 p.m. on 31 December. The Ministry of Sound event, in venues adjacent to the Dome, will begin at 9.00 p.m. after the Dome has closed. The risks and costs associated with staging the event (including policing, security, catering, medical etc.) are being fully borne by the Ministry of Sound. The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has no exposure to losses arising from the Ministry of Sound event, and the Ministry of Sound are covering the costs to NMEC of providing the venues and the use of the technical facilities in those venues. This is an excellent value for money deal for NMEC which provides a wonderful opportunity to celebrate Britain's youth and music.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the criteria and safeguards applied to ensure fairness and probity in the awarding of contracts in respect of the Millennium Dome. [136245]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company's policy is to conduct its procurement in accordance with Government procurement guidelines.

New Wembley Stadium

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what his latest estimate is of the cost of the new Wembley Stadium project. [136837]

Kate Hoey: I do not wish to speculate on estimated costs for the new Wembley Stadium. This is a matter for Wembley National Stadium Ltd.

Millennium Commission

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what deadline the Millennium Commission has requested for the conclusion of discussions with Legacy plc over the prospective purchase of the Dome. [137234]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 7 November 2000]: I have not received any request from the Millennium Commission for a deadline to be set for the conclusion of discussions with Legacy plc.

Broadcasting Standards

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 30 October 2000, Official Report, columns 331–32W, what research has been conducted since May 1997 by the Broadcasting Standards Commission into public attitudes towards the portrayal of violence in broadcast programmes. [137998]

Janet Anderson: The Broadcasting Standards Commission (BSC) has conducted since May 1997 the following research into public attitudes towards the portrayal of violence in broadcast programmes:

Men Viewing Violence (Stirling Media Research Institute, and Violence Research Centre, Manchester University, 1998; ISBN 1–872521–33–9).

In addition the BSC was a member (with the BBC and the Independent Television Commission) of the Joint Working Party on Violence on Television. The Working Party's report "Violence and the Viewer" was published in 1998.

The BSC's recently published Briefing Update Number 6, "Matters of Offence", (published as part of the BSC's continuing monitoring of public perception of broadcasting, and including results from opinion pools and panels of viewers) includes a section on violence.

Television Reception (High Peak)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when (a) digital terrestrial television, (b) cable television and (c) Channel 5 will be available in High Peak. [137618]

Janet Anderson: Digital terrestrial television (DTT) can already be received in parts of High Peak. DTT is broadcast from the Winter Hill, Sheffield, Chesterfield and Emley Moor transmitters and maps showing the predicted coverage from each of these sites have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses on CD-ROM. The BBC and Independent Television Commission are now considering ways of improving DTT coverage across the UK. The provision of cable services is a commercial matter for the cable operators. I understand from the ITC that no operator has plans to supply cable to the High Peak Area. Terrestrial Channel 5 services are not universally available in the area but are carried free-to-air on DTT and satellite platforms.

Television Subtitling

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what his policy is on encouraging television subtitle-users to take up digital television prior to analogue television being switched off. [137920]

Janet Anderson: The Broadcasting Act 1996 sets out a target of 50 per cent. of subtitling of digital terrestrial television programmes by the 10th anniversary of the start of the service. This will give viewers access to additional free-to-air and subscription channels with subtitles if they switch to digital terrestrial television. More generally, we are working with the broadcasting industry and consumer groups to ensure that viewers get accurate and sensible information about digital television. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced an agreed set of clear and simple messages on 31 October. We are keeping the rate of take-up of digital television under review to assess what further action might be needed to encourage take-up by all viewers.

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137424]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 13 November 2000]: I intend to participate in volunteering during 2001.

I fully support the aims of the International Year of Volunteers. Everyone benefits from volunteering and the Prime Minister has issued a challenge to employers to give their employees paid time off to work in the community. My Department has accepted this challenge and issued a notice to all staff advising them that they may take at least one day of paid leave a year to undertake voluntary activity.

Royal Art Collection

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make it an objective of his Department to provide for the entire Royal Art Collection to be placed on public display. [137547]

Mr. Alan Howarth: No. The Royal Collection is not the responsibility of the Government. Responsibility for the care and display of the Royal Collection rests with the Royal Collection Trust. Any question concerning the Royal Collection should be addressed to the Trust.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many headage payments were paid for sheep in England in (a) 1995, (b) 1996, (c) 1997, (d) 1998 and (e) 1999; how many sheep were subsequently marketed in each of these years; and what factors underlay the totals in each category. [136440]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 November 2000]: Information on sheep headage payments in England for the years requested was given in the answer to my hon. Friend on 28 July 2000, Official Report, columns 1115–16W.

To be eligible for payment the sheep concerned must be ewes kept for breeding which meet the rules of the two schemes. For the sheep annual premium scheme—SAPS—these include that appropriate quota is held by the producer, and for the hill livestock compensatory allowance—HLCA—that the sheep were kept in the less-favoured areas.

We have no information on whether the sheep are subsequently marketed in the same year. However around a quarter of the breeding flock is culled most years, as are the majority of those ewes which turn out to be barren.

Agrimonetary Compensation

Mr. Reed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the EU on the level of agrimonetary compensation in relation to the performance of the Euro; and if he will make a statement. [137057]

Ms Quin: Agrimonetary arrangements currently in place offset the effects of fluctuations between the euro and sterling. As a result, between 1999 and 2001, UK farmers are likely to benefit by around £496 million, in addition to the £133 million paid under the previous arrangements.

The most recent representation made to the EU Commission on this subject referred to the proposed payment of £34 million in agrimonetary compensation to arable farmers to offset the effects of currency fluctuations during 1999–2000: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Helen Jackson) on 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 620W.

GM Trials

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reason the trials of the forage maize, Chardon LL, genetically modified to be resistant to the herbicide glufosinate ammonium, did not involve the use of that herbicide. [136489]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 November 2000]: Glufosinate ammonium was used to establish distinctness of Chardon LL by the French Authorities who conducted the DUS (Distinctness, Uniformity and Stability) tests on behalf of the UK. However, I refer my hon. Friend to the answers given on 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 472W and 9 November 2000, Official Report, column 389W relating to those tests. Herbicide tolerance was not claimed by the National List applicant to be a special characteristic of Chardon LL for the purpose of trials for value for cultivation and use (VCU).

Sugar Beet (Self-sufficiency)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the sugar beet production in each of the EU member states showing the current level of self-sufficiency. [137550]

Ms Quin: The table provides details of sugar production, sugar consumption and the level of self-sufficiency in each member state for the July 1999 to June 2000 marketing year.

	Thousand tonnes			Percentage
Member state	Total beet sugar production	Total beet and cane sugar production[1]	Sugar consumption	Self sufficiency (beet)	Self sufficiency (beet and cane)

[1] Total sugar includes sugar produced from cane grown in the EU under quota, or refined from cane maximum supply needs, in Finland, France, Portugal and the UK

Carlisle Office

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the number of staff at his Department's Carlisle regional office will be increased; and if he will make a statement. [137711]

Ms Quin: The number of staff based at the Carlisle Regional Service Centre varies according to business needs. The number of staff in post at the office on 1 November this year was 259, compared to 236 staff in post on 1 January 2000. The numbers are expected to continue to increase during the course of 2001.

Swine Fever

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will discuss with the devolved administrations legislation to provide for a levy from pig farmers as part of a package of compensation for swine fever. [138097]

Ms Quin [holding answer 13 November 2000]: Frequent discussions take place with the devolved Administrations at both ministerial and official level on all manner of topics, including classical swine fever. The industry is committed to consulting interested parties, including organisations based in Scotland and Wales on a levy based Development Scheme that will be used to top-up Government payments under the Pig Welfare (Disposal) Scheme.

Antibiotics

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has assessed which supports the proposition that antibiotics fed to animals cause resistance to that antibiotic in humans. [137743]

Ms Quin [holding answer 13 November 2000]: An in-depth review of antibiotic resistance in relation to food safety was undertaken by the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food (ACMSF) and it was published in September 1999. The Government's response to the ACMSF's recommendations was published on 24 March 2000. Copies of the Report and the Government's response are available in the Library of the House.

The ACMSF report included recommendations for further research to characterise the origins of resistance in foodborne pathogens and commensal micro-organisms so as to improve the identification of the sources and routes of transfer of resistant organisms from the farm through food to humans. The ACMSF also recommended research into the use of microbiological risk assessment to quantify the magnitude of the key pathways by which microbial antibiotic resistance can transfer from food animals to humans via the food chain and the environment.

The Government are committed to a co-ordinated research programme to investigate problems associated with resistance to antimicrobials in the context of public health. Such a programme is being co-ordinated by an Interdepartmental Steering Group on Resistance to Antibiotics and other Antimicrobial Agents. The Steering Group carries out this work as part of the implementation of the Government Strategy to combat antimicrobial resistance which was published in June. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Fisheries

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of the economic link measures introduced for the fisheries sector on 1 January 1999; and if he will make a statement. [138655]

Mr. Morley: From 1 January 1999 all British registered fishing vessels over 10 metres catching more than two tonnes of quota stocks have had to demonstrate an economic link with fisheries dependent communities in the United Kingdom. This link can be demonstrated in a number of ways, for example, by vessels landing at least 50 per cent. by weight of their quota catch into the UK or by employing a crew of whom at least 50 per cent. are normally resident in a UK coastal area.

In the first year of operation over 1,750 vessels caught more than two tonnes of quota stocks and in almost every case achieved a satisfactory economic link, primarily through landings into the UK. Where a small number have failed to make the full list in 1999 they will be expected to make this up in 2000 and future years. The new arrangements have resulted in a significant increase both in the volume of landings made by foreign owned UK flagged vessels and in local expenditure on goods and services in the UK. They have also led to over 300 tonnes of additional quota being made available to fishermen in the under 10 metre fleet and non sector.

A full report by the Fisheries Departments in the United Kingdom on the operation of the economic link measures and their impact in 1999 has been placed in the Library of the House.

Farming and Rural Conservation Agency

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the 1999–2000 Annual report for the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency. [138656]

Mr. Nick Brown: The 1999–2000 Annual report and accounts for the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency were laid before Parliament today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Hedges

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 5 October, reference 142881, if he will make a statement on hedges, field margins and area-linked payments. [136222]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 7 November 2000, Official Report, column 150W.

PRIME MINISTER

Road Fuel

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Prime Minister what assurances were (a) exchanged and (b) discussed with the oil companies at his meeting with them on Thursday 14 September concerning (i) petroleum revenue tax on North Sea oil producers, (ii) future levels of road fuel duties and (iii) measures to ensure continued delivery of road fuel; and if he will make a statement. [138280]

The Prime Minister: I have meetings with a wide range of organisations and individuals. As with previous Administrations, it is not my practice to provide details of all such meetings.

Special Advisers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what were the reasons for the increase in the number of Government special advisers from 53 in June 1997 to 79 in June 2000. [136564]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 November 2000]: The Government believe that experience over the last quarter of a century has shown that special advisers have a useful role to play. It also made no secret of its intention to strengthen the centre of Government. The reason for the lower number in June 1997 is that a number of appointments had yet to be made.

TREASURY

Aviation Fuel (Taxation)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with his European counterparts regarding the taxation of aviation fuel. [137749]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 13 November 2000]: This subject was discussed at a meeting of Finance Ministers in June where it was agreed that the European Union should pursue negotiations on the international taxation of aviation fuel in the forum of the International Civil Aviation Organisation.

Diesel Fuel

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what conditions apply to the supply of diesel fuel to farmers at a reduced rate of duty. [137778]

Mr. Timms: The use of diesel charged at the 3.13p per litre rate of duty (red diesel) is restricted by schedule 1 to the Hydrocarbon Oil Duties Act 1979. This usually means that farmers can use red diesel only in agricultural vehicles, including tractors, that are used solely for purposes relating to agriculture.

Independent Petrol Retailers

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to provide additional tax relief for small independent petrol retailers. [137635]

Mr. Timms: There are currently no plans for introducing additional tax relief for petrol retailers.

ADVOCATE-GENERAL

Devolution Issues

29. Mr. Browne: To ask the Advocate-General how many devolution cases have been referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. [136349]

The Advocate-General for Scotland: Thus far, seven cases raising devolution issues have been referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

SCOTLAND

International Criminal Court

5. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Scottish Executive about giving effect in Scotland to the Rome treaty relating to the setting up of the International Criminal Court. [136325]

Mr. Wilson: I understand that the Scottish Executive will be introducing a Bill on the International Criminal Court next year.

Border Transport

6. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the new First Minister on the impact of the pre-Budget report on transport between Scotland and England. [136326]

Dr. Reid: I have regular discussions with the First Minister on a wide range of issues including the benefits to Scotland from the Government's economic policies. In this context my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's recent pre-Budget report contains further measures of benefit to all transport users.

Vehicle Fuel Tax

7. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the impact of vehicle fuel tax on the economy in Scotland. [136327]

Dr. Reid: Vehicle fuel tax is only one of many factors that have an impact on Scotland's economy and needs to be seen in the context of overall UK fiscal policy.

The measures announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his pre-Budget report to reduce fuel duties for cleaner fuels and vehicle excise duty will all bring significant financial benefits to Scotland's economy.

Dounreay

10. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will discuss the future of the Dounreay site in Caithness with the Atomic Energy Authority. [136330]

Dr. Reid: The UK Atomic Energy Authority published their Dounreay Site Restoration Plan on 9 October. The Authority's plans will require approval by the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Industries Inspectorate, the Scottish Environment Protection Agency and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. I will be keeping in close touch with the progress of these considerations.

Petrol Prices

11. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of petrol prices on the Scottish rural economy. [136331]

17. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the impact of vehicle fuel duties on rural communities in Scotland. [136337]

Mr. Wilson: Fuel prices are only one element that determines the effectiveness of the rural economy in Scotland. The impact of any individual item of taxation can only sensibly be seen within the overall context of fiscal policy.

The measures announced by the Chancellor in his pre-Budget report to raise the limit for the lower rate of Vehicle excise duty for cars of up to 1500cc, to remove vehicle excise duty for tractors and other agricultural vehicles, rebates of up to 50 per cent. of vehicle excise duty for heavy goods vehicles and the proposed reform of the VED system for HGVs will all bring significant financial benefits to Scotland's rural economy.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the First Minister on the impact of fuel prices on the Scottish economy. [136334]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend has regular discussions with the First Minister on a number of issues relevant to all aspects of the Scottish economy.

Govan Shipyard

12. Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his recent visit to the Govan shipyard. [136332]

Dr. Reid: Following the announcement made by the Secretary of State for Defence that BAE Systems Govan would build two ALSLs, I visited the yard on 26 and 27 October to meet management, union officials and workers. This order is expected to secure jobs at the yard and sustain it for the future.

Scottish Executive

13. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the arrangements for liaison between his Department and the Scottish Executive. [136333]

Mr. Wilson: Effective liaison arrangements are in place at all levels, both ministerial and official.

Rosyth Dockyard

15. Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has held with the Secretary of State for Defence about repairing Trafalgar and Swiftsure class submarines at the Rosyth dockyard. [136335]

Dr. Reid: I have regular discussions with the Secretary of State for Defence on a range of issues. The Ministry of Defence expect that the repair of Trafalgar and Swiftsure class submarines will be carried out at the submarines' home bases: Devonport or Faslane.

Rail Access (Wheelchair Users)

16. Miss Begg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has made on the provision by rail operators of full access arrangements for wheelchair-using passengers in Scotland. [136336]

Mr. Wilson: All new trains being introduced into service by operators in Scotland are subject to the Rail Vehicle Accessibility Regulations, which require them to be fully accessible to wheelchair users. These regulations are underpinned by the Rail Regulator's Code of Practice, "Meeting the Needs of Disabled Passengers" which is currently being re-drafted.

I understand that Scotrail have recently introduced into service new "Turbostar" trains which are fully accessible to wheelchair users. Scotrail will also shortly be introducing new fully accessible "Juniper" trains which will be used on Strathclyde PTE services.

New Deal

18. Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the operation of the New Deal in Scotland. [136338]

Mr. Wilson: The operation of the New Deal in Scotland has been a success. Over 28,000 young people have found work in just over two years. The New Deal is also helping long-term unemployed people, lone parents, disabled people and people over 50 find work. The success of the New Deal in Scotland is founded on a partnership with the Employment Service, the Scottish Executive and private and public sector partners.

Freight Facility Grants

19. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his oral answer of 25 July 2000, Official Report, column 886, if he will make a further statement on freight facility grants in Scotland. [136339]

Dr. Reid: Administration of the Freight Facilities Grant Scheme for railways in Scotland is the responsibility of the Scottish Executive. The Scottish Executive recently announced a doubling of expenditure on Freight Facility Grants (FFG) to £36 million in the period from April 2001 to March 2004 and an increased target of removing 18 million lorry miles from Scottish roads.

Clydeside Shipyards

20. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received concerning employment prospects in relation to commercial and Ministry of Defence contracts in respect of Clydeside shipyards. [136340]

Dr. Reid: Following the recent award by the Ministry of Defence for two ALSLs to BAE Systems at Govan, I received very favourable representations from the workforce about their confidence for the future of Govan. This has been further boosted by the news yesterday that Govan is to build eight Landing Craft. I know that Ferguson's have also had recent successes and BAE Systems at Scotstoun has a secure future in terms of Type 45 Destroyer work. There are, therefore, very good prospects for more than 3,000 workers in Clydeside shipyards.

Banknotes

21. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact on (a) the Scottish economy and (b) Scotland's identity of the use of Scottish banknotes. [136341]

Mr. Wilson: Scottish banknotes are a long established feature of commerce in Scotland. Apart from a very slight liquidity benefit accruing to Scottish banks authorised to issue their own notes, there is no direct impact on the Scottish economy. The issue of banknotes is determined according to UK monetary policy.

Disability Rights Commission

22. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the Disability Rights Commission in Scotland. [136342]

Dr. Reid: The Government are committed to full civil rights for disabled people. The Disability Rights Commission, which was set up on 25 April this year, is a major step forward towards achieving this. The Commission's remit extends throughout Great Britain and it has an office in Scotland. Both the UK Government and the Scottish Executive are working closely with this office.

Since it was established, the Disability Rights Commission has been active on a number of fronts. It runs a Disability Discrimination Act helpline (on 08458 622633) and it expects to take some 50,000 calls by the end of 2000–01. It is dealing with around 40 cases per month, which involve advice to individuals, providing information on other bodies, conciliation and providing direct support. The Commission will also be preparing Codes of Practice for the Special Educational Needs and Disability in Education Bill. It is also engaged in research.

The Government will continue to work closely with the Commission to ensure that we continue to make progress on issues that concern disabled people.

NGOs

23. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken to co-ordinate Scottish non-governmental organisations involved in aid programmes and assistance to countries which have experienced conflict or humanitarian and natural disasters with the work of other UK organisations. [136343]

Mr. Wilson: There was a debate in the Scottish Grand Committee on 10 July about the Scottish Contribution to International Development. To mark this debate, my right hon. Friend and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development hosted an international development reception at the Scotland Office building at Melville Crescent, Edinburgh. This reception enabled representatives of Scottish non-governmental organisations engaged in overseas work to meet in an informal atmosphere and discuss issues of concern with Ministers and officials.

This Government have a strong commitment to International Development. The UK is a leading player in the international objective of halving by 2015 the proportion of those living in extreme poverty. To help achieve this, the proportion of the UK's Gross National Product being devoted to overseas aid will rise from 0.29 per cent. in 2000–01 to 0.33 per cent. in 2003–04.

Scotland plays a major part in the work carried out by the UK. As my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary said at the Scottish Grand Committee, his Department works closely with Scottish institutions and society, and the Scottish Executive, to help achieve the Government's objectives.

Pensioners

24. Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with the Chancellor on the level of the basic State Pension and pensioner poverty in Scotland. [136344]

Dr. Reid: I have frequent discussions with my right hon. Friends the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Secretary of State for Social Security on a wide range of issues.

The Government announced in the pre-Budget report that the level of the basic state retirement pension would be increased by £5 a week for single people in April 2001 and by £8 for married couples. The Government also announced that in April 2002 the pension for single people will be further increased by £3 with the pension for couples going up then by £4.80. These increases are excellent news for the around 900,000 pensioners in Scotland.

The Government have taken major steps to combat pensioner poverty in Scotland. In the pre-Budget report, we announced that the Minimum Income Guarantee would be increased, from April 2001, to £92.15 a week for a single pensioner and £140.55 a week for couples. We also indicated that the Minimum Income Guarantee would be at least £100 a week for a single pensioner and £154 for a pensioner couple by 2003. The Winter Fuel Allowance will be set at £200 per eligible household this winter, which helps around one million people in Scotland.

Finally, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security has announced details of the proposed pensions credit which will benefit single pensioners with incomes below £135 and pensioner couples with incomes below £200.

Minimum Wage

25. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what impact the National Minimum Wage has had on wage rates in Scotland. [136345]

Mr. Wilson: The introduction of the National Minimum Wage has resulted in increased wage rates for over 100,000 people in Scotland, especially women and part-time workers, without any indication of significant adverse effect on employment and the economy.

Barnett Formula

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer about the operation of the Barnett formula. [136329]

Dr. Reid: I have regular discussions with the Chancellor of the Exchequer about a range of matters. The Barnett formula continues to provide a fair deal for Scotland within a United Kingdom framework.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Domestic Violence

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many non-molestation orders were issued in (a) 1999 and (b) 1989. [137881]

Jane Kennedy: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is as follows:

Non-molestation orders granted

	1999[1]	1989[2]
Magistrates court	588	[3]—
County court	17,774	14,239
High Court	103	[3]—

Angel Heights Hostel, Leeds

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what support the National Asylum Support Service is provided for the asylum seekers living in the Angel Heights hostel in Leeds; and if he will make a statement. [135831]

Mrs. Roche: The National Asylum Support Service is aware of two hostels in Leeds used for housing asylum seekers: Angel Hall and Angel House. Angel Group Ltd., a contracted provider of accommodation to the National Asylum Support Service (NASS), operates both of these hostels. Neither of these hostels is currently under contract to the National Asylum Support Service.

However, Angel Group Ltd. has occasionally used Angel Hall as a drop-off point and reception centre for asylum seekers dispersed to Leeds by NASS. These asylum seekers have then been moved to other addresses within the Leeds area.

One asylum seeker supported by NASS was temporarily housed for a short period in one of the Angel hostels in Leeds. NASS does use a hostel in Newcastle upon Tyne operated by Angel Group Ltd. called Angel Heights.

Residence Permits

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the average length of time is of applications for (a) residence documents and (b) endorsements given to third country national spouses of EU nationals exercising Treaty rights who have been granted indefinite leave to remain; [137823]

(2) how many applications for residence permits or leave to remain as the spouse of an EEA national exercising Treaty rights were refused on the basis that he believed the marriage to be one of convenience in 1999; [137274]

(3) what the average time was for consideration of (a) applications for residence documents and (b) evidence made by third country national family members of EU nationals exercising Treaty rights in the United Kingdom in 1999; [137284]

(4) how many applications for (a) residence documents and (b) endorsements by third country national spouses of Community nationals exercising Treaty rights were refused on the basis that he considered the marriage to be one of convenience during 1999; [137279]

(5) what was the average time for consideration of applications for residence permits for EU nationals exercising Treaty rights in the United Kingdom in 1999. [137285]

Mrs. Roche: This information is no longer recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The way in which the Immigration and Nationality Directorate handles European Economic Area (EEA) applications is currently being reviewed. Once the review has taken place we should be in a position to provide more detailed statistical information relating to EEA applications.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications for residence permits were made by EU nationals exercising Treaty rights in the United Kingdom in 1999; [137276]

(2) how many applications for residence documents by EU nationals exercising Treaty rights in the United Kingdom were granted in 1999; [137288]

(3) how many applications for residence permits for EU nationals exercising Treaty rights were issued for a period of less than five years, during 1999; [137280]

(4) how many residence documents and evidence of residence were granted to third country national family members of EU national exercising Treaty rights in the United Kingdom during 1999; [137286]

(5) how many applications for residence documents by third national family members of EU nationals exercising Treaty rights were made in 1999. [137287]

Mrs. Roche: Available statistics do not record separately European Economic Area (EEA) decisions made on applications for residence permits and residence documents and this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. During 1999, 7,322 EEA decisions were made, although this figure will include some decisions on applications that were made in late 1998. This figure does not include numbers of persons who have been admitted to the United Kingdom in line with EEA family permits or numbers of those whose applications were made during the end of 1999, but not resolved until early this year.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many EU nationals he estimates exercised Treaty rights in the UK during the period 1 January to 31 December 1999. [137282]

Mrs. Roche: Because of the principles of freedom of movement there is no obligation for an European Economic Area national to hold a residence permit. It is therefore not possible to provide this information.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters were sent to Community nationals in the United Kingdom in 1999 advising them that they were no longer considered to be exercising Treaty rights and should therefore leave the United Kingdom. [137281]

Mrs. Roche: This information is not specifically recorded.

Service Providers

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statutory measures the Government have adopted in the UK to give third country national employees of service providers based in another member state the right to provide services in the UK. [137291]

Mrs. Roche: No statutory measures have been adopted. Effect is given to implementing this judgment through instructions that third country national employees of service providers established in another member state are not required to obtain work permits for employees being sent to provide services in the United Kingdom.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is as regards applications for exceptional leave to remain in respect of persons who are (a) HIV positive and (b) have AIDS and who if returned to their home country would not be able to receive appropriate medical treatment. [137374]

Mrs. Roche: The United Kingdom is a signatory to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (ECHR) now given effect in domestic law by the Human Rights Act 1998. In accordance with our obligations under Article 3 of the ECHR, exceptional leave to remain may be granted where credible medical evidence exists that return to the country of origin, due to a lack of medical facilities in the country concerned, would substantially reduce an applicant's life expectancy and subject them to acute physical and mental suffering, in circumstances where the United Kingdom can be regarded as having assumed responsibility for their care. Each case is considered on its own merits.

Drug Abuse Projects

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those projects his Department supports which highlight the dangers of drug abuse to children and young people. [137338]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office does not fund such projects which, at local level, are the responsibility of Drug Action Teams. The Drugs Prevention Advisory Service of the Home Office, however, does support local initiatives and the work of Drug Action Teams.

The Prison Service drug strategy, which includes counselling and information leaflets as well as detoxification, drug testing and treatment, applies equally to young offenders and adults.

At a national level, the United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator Unit (UKADCU) has responsibility for the 10-year strategy of joint action to tackle the problem of drug misuse. One of the aims of the strategy is to ensure that young people have access to all the information and support they need in order to resist drug misuse and thus to achieve their full potential in society. The Department of Health, which is the lead department in the area, is contributing to this objective through a wide range of projects and initiatives that are listed in the United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator's Annual Report 1999/2000, copies of which are available in the Library.

The Young Justice Board, which is a non-departmental public body, currently funds 32 projects for young people with a drugs and alcohol focus.

Special Police Constables

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special police constables were recruited to the Kingston Metropolitan Police Division in each year from 1992 to 1999. [137595]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information is not collected centrally in the form requested.

I am advised by the Metropolitan Police Service (MPS) that, the number of police special constables recruited to the Kingston division is as follows:

Year	Number
1997	2

Their latest figures show that three special constables have so far been recruited this year (2000).

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police special constables were on active duty in the Kingston Metropolitan police division in each year from 1992 to 2000. [137596]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I am advised by the Metropolitan police Service (MPS) that they define special constables on active duty as being those officers who perform more than 96 hours per annum. Using this definition, the number of police special constables on active duty in the Kingston Metropolitan division in each of the year 1995 to 2000 is as follows:

	Number
1995	18
1996	26
1997	31
1998	11
1999	10
2000	12

The data are based upon the present divisional boundaries of Kingston, which are now co-terminus with those of the Royal Borough of Kingston-upon-Thames. It therefore excludes those officers who served within those parts of the Kingston Metropolitan police district which were transferred to Surrey police during 2000. The data on these individuals are not currently available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Similarly, the equivalent data are not available for the years 1992 to 1994 and, again, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Police Officer Retirements

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many serving police officers in the Kingston Metropolitan police division are due to retire in 2000–01. [137594]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I am advised by the Commissioner of the police of the Metropolis that three officers retired on ordinary pension and a further five were medically retired during the period from 1 April 2000 to 31 October 2000.

Records show that between 1 November 2000 and 31 March 2001 there are a further 10 officers who are eligible to retire by virtue of either age or length of service.

Asylum Seekers (Liverpool)

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of management arrangements for asylum seekers at the Landmark and Inn on the Park in Liverpool. [137522]

Mrs. Roche: The National Asylum Support Service Performance Monitoring Inspections section has reviewed all management procedures in place at Landmark Liverpool and all other private sector providers. Where these reviews have identified some shortfalls in procedures these have been addressed.

The National Asylum Support Service Performance Monitoring Inspections section regularly assesses the implementation of these procedures as part of its work.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of support services provided to asylum seekers by private landlords in Liverpool. [137521]

Mrs. Roche: The National Asylum Support Service has a dedicated Performance Monitoring Inspections team. These inspectors regularly review with providers of accommodation, housing management issues and the delivery of the support services specified in their contracts.

NDPBs (Scotland)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the non-departmental public bodies responsible to him which have duties relating to Scotland, indicating their budget and staffing in Scotland, the number of Scottish board members and their emoluments. [137701]

Mr. Straw: The following non-departmental public bodies, sponsored by my Department, have a remit which covers Great Britain or the United Kingdom:

Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs
Alcohol Education and Research Council
Animal Procedures Committee
Commission for Racial Equality
Community Development Foundation
Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority
Criminal Injuries Compensation Appeals Panel
Data Protection Tribunal
Firearms Consultative Committee
Gaming Board for Great Britain
Horse Race Betting Levy Board
Horse Race Totalisator Board
Investigatory Powers Tribunal
Misuse of Drugs Advisory Body
Misuse of Drugs Professional Panel
Misuse of Drugs Tribunal
Office of the Data Protection Commissioner
Poisons Board
Police Arbitration Tribunal
Police Information Technology Organisation
Police Negotiating Board
Office of the Surveillance Commissioners.

The remaining information is not held centrally in the form requested but general information on expenditure, staffing, board members and levels of remuneration is published annually in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies". Copies of "Public Bodies 1999" have been placed in the Library, "Public Bodies 2000" is due to be published next month. Information on board membership and remuneration can also be downloaded from the Cabinet Office Public Appointments Directory website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk).

Charities

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many charities have failed in each year since 1995. [137718]

Mr. Boateng: This information is not collected centrally.

Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when compensation to Mr. John Slough, a constituent, for specialist tooling equipment held by the West Mercia Police, will be paid under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997; and if he will make a statement. [137619]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 10 November 2000]: Compensation has already been paid to Mr. Slough in respect of a range of items eligible for payment under the terms of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 Compensation Schemes. The Government do not accept that other items on which he is seeking compensation fall within the terms of the schemes. We have made a number of proposals to Mr. Slough as to how further progress might be made on his claim. It is open to Mr. Slough to retrieve from the police those items he surrendered which are not covered by the compensation scheme.

Freedom of Information Bill

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will place the draft working document of the Fees Regulations for the Freedom of Information Bill in the Library. [138535]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The draft working document for the Fees Regulations required by the Freedom of Information Bill was placed in the Library on 10 November.

National Asylum Support Service

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the level of support provided by the National Asylum Support Service for those aged under 16 years. [138536]

Mrs. Roche: I laid before Parliament, yesterday, regulations amending the Asylum Support Regulations 2000 to enable an increased rate of voucher support to be provided to under 16-year-old dependants of asylum seekers supported by the National Asylum Support Service with effect from 4 December. The rate will rise from £26.60 to £30.95 per week.

Chief Inspector for Prisons and Probation

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the outcome was of the consultation on the appointment of a joint Chief Inspector for Prisons and Probation. [138537]

Mr. Straw: As I announced on 9 June 2000, Official Report, columns 392–93W, Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons Sir David Ramsbotham's appointment was extended until the end of July 2001 when Sir Graham Smith, Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Probation, is also due to retire.

In response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for the Forest of Dean (Mrs. Organ) on 27 July 2000, Official Report, column 879W, I told the House that I had established a consultation exercise to gauge public opinion on proposals, including the option of a joint Chief Inspector, designed to ensure that the Inspectorates of prisons and probation support closer working between the two services while maintaining the independence and rigour of the inspection process. The consultation exercise ended on 31 October. Copies of the responses to the consultation exercise will be placed in the Library.

A majority of those consulted favoured some change—establishing terms of reference for the inspection of joint working between the criminal justice agencies and the sharing of inspectors between the Inspectorates. In contrast, only small minorities were in favour of the status quo, or of the appointment of a joint Chief Inspector for prisons and probation.

During the consultation exercise a helpful scheme was put forward by Her Majesty's Chief Inspectors of Constabulary, the Crown Prosecution Service, Magistrates' Courts, Probation, and Prisons to inspect practice across their boundaries systematically. This scheme has much to recommend it and the consultation exercise also suggests that it will command broad support. It is therefore the option which I propose to pursue, along with the arrangements canvassed in the consultation exercise for bringing the work of the Inspectorates closer together.

Both Sir David and Sir Graham have made significant contributions to raising standards in the prison and probation services respectively, and I am grateful to them for their work. In view of the retirements in July next year I shall be advertising both Chief Inspector posts in the New Year.

Anti-social Behaviour Orders

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he has given to magistrates on implementing anti-social behaviour orders. [136352]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Training for lay magistrates is organised and delivered locally but is based on the advice and syllabuses prepared by the Judicial Studies Board. In addition to the training pack and handout on anti-social behaviour orders (ASBO) which were sent out by the Board last year, we have issued two booklets to the relevant agencies including the magistrates' courts service: "Anti-Social Behaviour Orders—Guidance", produced by the Home Office in March 1999; and "Anti-Social Behaviour Orders—Guidance on drawing up local ASBO Protocols", produced jointly by the Home Office and the Local Government Association in June 2000.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those local authorities that have issued anti-social behaviour orders since April 1999 and the number of orders in each case. [138327]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Over 100 anti-social behaviour orders have been issued since the measure was implemented on 1 April 1999. Figures for the numbers of orders obtained by local authority area are not held centrally.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there were in each police force area in (a) 1979, (b) 1987, (c) 1992, (d) 1997 and (e) in each following year up to the latest date for which figures are available. [137859]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information for 1979 to 1998 can be found in the following annual publications:

Tables 3A and 7A of Criminal statistics England and Wales 1979 (Command Paper 8098).

Tables S3.2(A) and S3.4(A) of Criminal statistics England and Wales 1987, 1992, 1997 and 1998 Supplementary tables Volume 3.

Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Copies of tables providing data for 1999 have also been placed in the Library. The Command Paper Criminal statistics England and Wales 1999, along with its Supplementary tables, Volumes 1 to 4, will be published next month.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) violent crimes and (b) total recorded crimes there were in each police force area in (i) 1979, (ii) 1987, (iii) 1992, (iv) 1997 and (v) in each following year up to the latest date for which figures are available. [137858]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The requested data are shown in the following tables. The violent crime figures are the total of violence against the person offences, sexual offences and robbery.

The figures before and after 1 April 1998 cannot be directly compared. This is because the Counting Rules for recorded crime were changed on 1 April 1998, with an expanded coverage of offences and the emphasis more on measurement of one crime per victim. All offences that are triable on indictment and triable either-way have been counted since this date, as are some summary offences which are closely linked to more serious offences. The change increased the overall count in England and Wales of the offence groups of violence against the person, sexual offences and robbery by 118 per cent., 4 per cent. and 1 per cent. respectively. More details of the change in counting rules can be found in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 18/99, entitled "Recorded Crime Statistics England and Wales April 1998 to March 1999", which is in the Library.

Women in Prison

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has commissioned on the impact of a mother receiving a custodial sentence on her children; and if he will make a statement. [137353]

Mr. Boateng: The most recently published study of imprisoned mothers was "Imprisoned Women and Mothers" by Caddle and Crisp. It was commissioned by the Prison Service and published in 1997 (Home Office Research Study 162). The entire female prisoner population at the end of 1994, comprising 1,766 women, were surveyed. In-depth interviews were conducted with the 61 per cent. of that population who were either pregnant or mothers of children under 18.

In the report of a "Review of Principles, Policies and Procedures on Mothers and Babies/Children in Prison" (Her Majesty's Prison Service July 1999) and the Prison Service's Response and Action Plan (December 1999), a number of areas of research concerning the children of women prisoners was recommended. The Prison Service is giving consideration to these recommendations. Copies of both documents were placed in the Library.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost of keeping a mother and child in a mother and baby unit for one week. [137356]

Mr. Boateng: At present no separate budget is allocated to the mother and baby units. The cost of running the unit is met from the individual establishment's central budget. Mother and baby units (MBU) do not have a standard cost as the physical accommodation offered is different in each one. Additionally the regimes offered differ from prison to prison depending on its security category and its function within the female estate. The information requested is given in the table.

	Prisoner places	Open/closed	Weekly cost per prisoner place on MBU (£)
Askham Grange	20	Open	636
Holloway	13	Closed	858
New Hall	9	Closed	863
Styal	20	Closed	939

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women received a custodial sentence; what was the average length of sentence; and what proportion of those women were imprisoned for offences of violence, in each of the past five years. [137351]

Mr. Boateng: Available information, taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database is given in the table.

Number of females sentenced to immediate custody for indictable and all offences, average sentence length given and proportion of these sentences which were for violent[1] offences England and Wales 1995–99

	Total immediate custody	Average sentence length (months)	Percentage of custodial sentences which were for violent[1] offences

1998	6,567	9.0	12
1999	7,504	8.9	11

[1] Includes indictable offence groups of violence against the person, sexual offences and robbery

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women were remanded in custody in each of the past five years; what proportion of these women later received a custodial sentence; and how many of them were mothers of children under 18 years. [137352]

Mr. Boateng: Information on the number of females remanded to custody is given in the tables. This information is published in successive volumes of "Prison statistics England and Wales" (Tables 2.2 and 2.6 of the 1999 edition, column 4805), copies of which are in the Library. Survey research suggests that about 60 per cent. of women in prison are pregnant or have children under 18 years. Separate figures are not available for those on remand.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women's prisons provide facilities for extended day visits for children; and if he will make it his policy that all women's prisons should provide such facilities. [137355]

Mr. Boateng: Nine women's prisons offer extended visits, two have recently considered the feasibility of providing them, and the other two have open conditions. Our policy is to encourage establishments to provide such facilities wherever possible, although the extent to which each establishment is able to deliver this will depend upon individual operational and resource considerations. For this reason, I do not plan to make mandatory the provision of such facilities, either in women's prisons or the prison estate as a whole.

Correspondence

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the hon. Member for Manchester, Central's letters of 31 August and 12 September concerning the case of Mr. F. (F245203). [137901]

Mrs. Roche: I replied to my hon. Friend on 7 November. I am sorry for the delay.

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average timescale is for dealing with family reunion cases referred to the Home Office by the High Commission in Nairobi. [137988]

Mrs. Roche: This information is not available. A number of new initiatives have been put in place to clear all backlogs of entry clearance applications and to provide a faster turnround time for new applications in the future.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a decision will be made in the case of RHJ (reference AS31747) whose case was referred to the Home Office from the High Commission in Addis Ababa on 14 September. [137902]

Mrs. Roche: The case will be considered urgently and a decision will be made as soon as possible. I am sorry that one has not been made before now.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances is (a) exceptional leave and (b) indefinite leave granted to applicants seeking leave to remain in the United Kingdom. [137989]

Mrs. Roche: Indefinite leave to remain is granted to qualifying applicants in accordance with the criteria set out under a number of categories in the Immigration Rules (HC 395, as amended). Grants of exceptional leave to remain outside the Immigration Rules will be based on the particular circumstances of individual cases. More detailed information may be obtained from the published version of the Immigration Directorate's Instructions which is available on the Home Office website.

Drug-related Crimes

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the target times following arrest are for an individual to have an assessment under the arrest referral scheme for drug-related crimes. [136610]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There are no specific target times for arrest referral assessments for drug related offenders. The aim is for referred arrestees to have an assessment as soon as possible.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Child Abduction Unit

36. Mr. Burden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the work of the Child Abduction Unit in assisting UK citizens whose children have been abducted to Greece. [136358]

Jane Kennedy: The Child Abduction Unit exercises the Lord Chancellor's day-to-day responsibilities as the Central Authority for England and Wales and Northern Ireland for the operation of the Hague and European Conventions on international child abduction, both in relation to Greece and other countries. In addition to receiving and transmitting requests for the return of children or for exercising rights of access, the Child Abduction Unit gives help and advice to parents, other Central Authorities, the judiciary, the legal profession and anyone else who asks for it.

Magistrates Courts (Closures)

37. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many successful appeals against closure of magistrates courts there were in (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999; what this figure represents as a percentage of all appeals made; and if he will make a statement. [136359]

Jane Kennedy: In 1997 there were two successful appeals against the closure of magistrates courts; in 1998, there was one successful appeal; and one in 1999. In percentage terms, this is 12 per cent. for 1997; 4 per cent. for 1998 and 11 per cent. for 1999.

The hon. Gentleman will have heard me say that decisions concerning the future of magistrates courts in an MCC area are for the relevant Committee to determine.

Public Trust Office

38. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the work of the Public Trust Office. [136360]

Jane Kennedy: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor made a statement on the Public Trust Office on 11 April 2000, Official Report, House of Lords, WA28–29, and issued "Making Changes: The Future of the Public Trust Office". This document sets out a programme of reform for the Public Trust Office which, after allowing for an appropriate period of consultation, we are now proceeding to implement in the light of the representations received.

Solicitors (Redress)

40. Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to improve the methods of seeking redress against solicitors. [136362]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor wrote to the President of the Law Society on 23 July 1999, when he set down targets and a timetable for improvements in the performance at the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors. A copy of this letter is available in the Libraries of both Houses. Following my visit to the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors on 9 October, the Law Society is considering suggested improvements to the avenues and mechanisms through which clients seek redress.

Access to Justice (Cheshire)

41. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on access to justice in Cheshire. [136364]

Jane Kennedy: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave him on 25 July 2000, Official Report, columns 541–42W.

There are nine magistrates courts, nine county courts and three Crown courts. In Cheshire, as elsewhere, courts are been modernised, fit for the 21st Century. For example, one of the aims of the Crown Court Programme is to improve efficiency and enhance the facilities at all Crown court centres, irrespective of size, location or current accommodation limitations.

The Community Legal Service (CLS) will improve access to good quality legal advice, through local networks of legal services. There are now 154 firms of solicitors and advice agencies in Cheshire in the latest edition of the CLS Directory, which means they either have the CLS Quality Mark already or are likely to apply for the Quality Mark in the near future. They will provide the local CLS network in Cheshire. A CLS Partnership has also been set up covering Cheshire, which will co-ordinate the funding and provision of local services. Since its launch in May, the Cheshire CLS Partnership has been particularly focused on developing referral procedures for the local network, and it has recently held training days for local solicitors and advice agencies on referrals.

NDPBs (Scotland)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the non-departmental public bodies responsible to him which have duties relating to Scotland, indicating their budget and staffing in Scotland, the number of Scottish board members and their emoluments. [137626]

Jane Kennedy: The Lord Chancellor is responsible for the Council on Tribunals, which has a Scottish committee looking after issues relating to Scotland. The chairman of the committee, and two of its members, are also members of the main council and are jointly appointed by the Lord Chancellor and the Scottish Ministers. Although not having direct responsibility for the Scottish committee, the Lord Chancellor does reimburse the cost of the Committee at the end of each year.

The budget for the committee for the year ending 31 March 2000 was £89,000. The committee is supported by a secretariat of two officials. The Lord Chancellor is jointly responsible for three members (the other four are appointed solely by the Scottish Ministers). The Scottish committee chairman is paid £20,803 p.a. Committee members are paid £7,567 p.a.

Of the Lord Chancellor's other non-departmental public bodies, only the Advisory Council on Public Records has some duties relating to Scotland. This is because the Public Record Office is the UK national archive and some of the records and issues considered by the Council will affect Scotland as part of the UK. However, there is a separate statutory body in Scotland—the Scottish Records Advisory Council—run by the National Archives of Scotland.

Land Registry

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how he intends to take forward the quinquennial review of Her Majesty's Land Registry. [138470]

Jane Kennedy: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor, announced the launch of the second Quinquennial Review of Her Majesty's Land Registry on 6 September. The review will include an assessment of its performance as well as a thorough consideration of all options for carrying forward its work, including the Better Quality Services approach to delivery. The agreed terms of reference have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Andrew Edwards CB has been appointed to carry out the review which will include widespread consultation with those who have an interest in the work of the Land Registry. It is expected that the report of the review will be published in spring 2001.

Legal Aid Reform (Northern Ireland)

Gillian Merron: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Lord Chancellor's proposals for legal aid reform in Northern Ireland will be published. [138471]

Mr. Lock: The White Paper "The Way Ahead" (Cm 4849) was published on 19 September, when copies were placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Drink Driving

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has for an advertising campaign in the run-up to Christmas to discourage drinking and driving; and if he will make a statement; [136512]

(2) what representations he has received about previous advertising campaigns which sought to highlight the dangers of drinking and driving; [136506]

(3) what budget he has set aside for an advertising campaign to discourage drinking and driving during the Christmas period; [136510]

(4) what budget he has set aside for the on-going advertising campaign against drinking and driving. [136509]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 6 November 2000]: In June this year, we launched the THINK! road safety publicity campaign which brings together the range of road safety messages for all road users. The total publicity budget for THINK! for the current financial year is £9 million.

Drinking and driving is a year-round issue, and is one of the issues we tackle as part of the THINK! campaign advertising, on television, on radio and in other media.

However, we shall be focusing again on the drink-drive issue in the run-up to Christmas and the new year, and we have set aside around £1.9 million for this. Television advertising will run from 27 November, supported by radio advertising and poster advertising. In addition we are producing display materials for use by the police and road safety officers around the country in support of their own campaigns.

We have received no formal representations about previous advertising campaigns.

London Underground

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what targets (a) were in place on 1 January and (b) he has set recently for the performance of (i) the London Underground and (ii) its contractors; and if he will make a statement. [137303]

Mr. Hill: The Government have set performance targets for London Underground covering the period 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2001. These were announced to the House of Commons in response to a question from the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Brake) on 4 April 2000, Official Report, columns 309–10W.

The targets, which are to be met by the end of 2000–01, are as follows:

Measure	Government target
Capacity (train kms run)	10 per cent. increase on 1998–99 performance
Reliability (unweighted excess journey time—minutes)	4 per cent. improvement on 1998–99 level
Customer satisfaction measures (measured through LT's Customer Satisfaction Survey)	Average score (out of 100)
Train service	77
Information	77
Customer safety and security	83
Staff helpfulness and availability	70
Cleanliness	69

The Government do not set specific targets for the performance of London Underground's contractors. Their performance is, however, reflected in the targets set for London Underground itself.

In addition to the above targets, the 10-Year Plan includes a target to cut journey times on London Underground services by increasing capacity and reducing delays. Specific targets will be agreed with the Mayor after the Public Private Partnership has been established.

Ministerial Directions

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer from the Chief Secretary to the Treasury of 23 October 2000, Official Report, columns 73–76W, on ministerial directions, (1) if he will place in the Library the text and supporting documentation of the directions made by Ministers in his Department in 1998; and if he will make a statement; [137297]

(2) if he will place in the Library the text and supporting documentation of the directions made by Ministers in his Department in 1997; and if he will make a statement. [137296]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I have considered these requests under the terms of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information and concluded that providing this information would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion within government. The request therefore falls within the terms of exemption 2 of the Code of Practice.

Area Cost Adjustment

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from local authority associations concerning the use of the most recent earnings data in the area cost adjustment. [137329] [138077]

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from the local authority associations in relation to the Area Cost Adjustment Settlement for 2001–02. [137511]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Representations have been received both from the Local Government Association and from the Association of London Government on the use of the 1999 New Earnings Survey data in the Area Cost Adjustment. Both pressed the Government to update this data.

Representations have also been received from two special interest groups, SIGOMA and the "Cliff Edge" group. Both pressed the Government not to update this data. Over 175 representations have been received from local authorities, hon. Members and other interested parties.

Emissions

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions by how much the output of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide have been reduced in the last five years; and which power stations continue to emit these substances. [137719]

Mr. Meacher: The latest figures available from the National Atmospheric Emissions Inventory show that in 1998 the total UK emissions of SO_2 and NOx were as 1,615 and 1,753 kilotonnes respectively. Between 1994–98 emissions of SO_2 have been reduced by 56 per cent. and of NOx by 76 per cent. Emissions will continue to reduce under the Environment Agency's ongoing regulation of sulphur emissions and, in the longer term, the revised EC Large Combustion Plant Directive and the proposed National Emission Ceilings Directive, which from 2010 will set annual ceilings of 585 and 1,167 kilotonne for SO_2 and NOx respectively. A list of large power stations[1], that continue to emit one or both of these substances, is listed.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his latest estimate is of the number of (a) hostel places for rough sleepers available and (b) rough sleepers in (i) London, (ii) Liverpool, (iii) Leeds, (iv) Birmingham and (v) Manchester. [138001]

Ms Armstrong: Each of the cities mentioned has a large number of hostels providing a range of different types of accommodation. Millennium Site, Greenwich (Contamination)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the remaining level of contamination land at the Millennium Site on the Greenwich Peninsula; and what plans exist to remediate the site. [137872]

Ms Armstrong: The site of the Millennium Experience has been remediated fit for purpose in accordance with the requirements of both the London Borough of Greenwich and the Environment Agency. There are currently no requirements for further remediation. Any works in relation to foundations of future buildings which require amendments to the remediation strategy that has been adopted and approved to date will be considered at that time.

Village Speed Limits

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what deadline has been set for the establishment of 30 mph as the normal speed limit in villages. [138067]

Mr. Hill: The Road Safety Strategy outlines our commitment to a rural road hierarchy, one result of which would be 30mph speed limits in villages. A Government amendment to the Transport Bill requires the Secretary of State to undertake a review of the issues relating to the implementation of the hierarchy, and publish a report within 12 months of Royal Assent.

In the meantime, local traffic authorities already have the power to impose 30mph speed limits throughout any village where they feel this is necessary.

Farnborough Airfield

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made about the effect on wildlife and natural habitats of plans to cut down woods near Farnborough Airfield. [137971]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 10 November 2000]: No such assessment has been made by the Secretary of State as this matter has not come before him formally for determination. The proposal was the subject of a Notice of Proposed Development submitted to Rushmoor Borough Council by the Ministry of Defence. As a competent authority under the Conservation (Natural Habitats, etc.) Regulations 1994, the Ministry of Defence are required to carry out an appropriate assessment of the implications of the proposed works on the Thames Basin Heaths potential SPA and I understand they are undertaking such an assessment.

Rail Maintenance

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the contractors and sub-contractors responsible to Railtrack for maintenance of the track at Hatfield and (b) the names of passenger and freight train operators using that line, together with the (i) owners and (ii) lessees of the motive power and rolling stock used and their contractors for (1) medium and (2) heavy maintenance of that stock. [138213]

Mr. Hill: Railtrack's contractor responsible for maintaining the track at Hatfield is Balfour Beatty Rail Maintenance Ltd. Information is not held centrally on sub-contractors used by Balfour Beatty.

The train companies which use the line at Hatfield and their suppliers of rolling stock and maintenance are given in the table. Train maintenance is normally split into light and heavy maintenance rather than light and medium.

	Owner of motive power and rolling stock	Lessee of motive power and rolling stock	Contractor for light maintenance	Contractor for heavy maintenance
GNER	Angel Trains; HSBC Rail	GNER	GNER	Angle Trains; HSBC Rail
WAGN	Angel Trains; HSBC Rail	WAGN	WAGN; Adtranz	Railcare
Hull Trains	Porterbrook Leasing	Anglia Railways	Hull Trains; Adtranz	Adtranz
EWS	Locos
	Angel Trains; EWS	EWS	EWS	EWS
	Rolling stock
	Lafarge Redland	EWS	Wabtech	Wabtech

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 457W, what arrangements are made by the Railway Department of the Health and Safety Executive for the licensing and inspection of (a) contractors used by the owners and lessors of the stock for medium and heavy maintenance and (b) contractors used by other owning or leasing companies with contracts with rail operators. [138212]

Mr. Hill: The Health and Safety Executive do not license either type of contractor. The duty for ensuring the competence of a contractor in the railway industry lies with the holder of the accepted safety case. The holders of safety cases for the railway industry are (in summary) Railtrack, Railtrack's main contractors, the freight and passenger train operators and London Underground.

Council Tax

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the average percentage rises in Council Tax in each of the past five years. [138219]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Average Council Tax increases in England (both average Council Tax per dwelling and Band D) between 1996–97 and 2000–01 are given in the table.

	Percentage increase on average Council Tax bill per dwelling	Percentage increase on average Council Tax for a Band D dwelling
1996–97	5.4	6.1
1997–98	7.4	6.5
1998–99	8.9	8.6
1999–2000	6.8	6.8
2000–01	6.2	6.1

The percentage increases in average Council Tax per dwelling give an indication of the increase in size of the Council Tax bill faced by the average resident. The percentage increases for the average Band D Council Tax (based on a dwelling occupied by two adults) are the measure used for tax-setting purposes.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the percentage rise in public sector current receipts for Council Tax in each of the last five years. [138218]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The information requested is given in the table.

Council Tax receipts

	Level (£000)	Increase (percentage)
1995–96	7,730,839	8.7
1996–97	8,404,016	8.7
1997–98	9,134,089	8.7
1998–99	10,133,609	10.9
1999–2000	10,992,040	8.5

Ministerial Conference on Environment and Health

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will meet the Chartered Institute of Environmental Health to discuss the inclusion of housing and health as an agenda item at the Ministerial Conference on Environment and Health in 2004. [138056]

Mr. Raynsford: The links between housing and health are important, and I would be happy to meet with the CIEH to discuss the issues in due course. In the first instance they should write to me with their detailed proposals.

Heathrow

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to order (a) an environmental impact assessment and (b) a health impact assessment for the proposed Terminal 5 at Heathrow; and when he expects to publish these impact assessments. [137986]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 13 November 2000]: Heathrow Terminal 5 was the subject of a major Public Inquiry between May 1995 and March 1999. The Inquiry Inspector has said that he intends to produce his report within two years of the end of the Inquiry. The Terminal 5 proposal was subject to an environmental impact assessment and during the Inquiry the Inspector heard and received evidence on a wide range of environmental issues including the potential impact on health. The final decision on Terminal 5 and the associated applications, orders and appeals considered by the Inquiry rests with the Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he next plans to review aircraft landing charges at Heathrow. [137750]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 13 November 2000]: Under the 1986 Airports Act the Civil Aviation Authority sets a maximum limit on the amounts that may be levied by way of airport charges, including landing charges, over a five-year period at airports designated by the Secretary of State. Heathrow, Gatwick, Stansted and Manchester are those airports which are currently subject to this detailed price control. New price caps are required for the period 1 April 2003 to 31 March 2008. The CAA is presently conducting a programme of work, including consultation, which will lead to decisions on the new price caps by autumn 2002.

Ultra-Low Sulphur Petrol

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the environmental effects of the large scale production of ultra-low sulphur petrol. [138230]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 13 November 2000]: Ultra-low sulphur petrol will have a direct benefit in reducing traffic related air pollutants. It will also facilitate the introduction of new fuel-efficient petrol engine technology. This emerging technology holds the promise of significant reductions in CO_2 emissions from the vehicle fleet and will help ensure delivery of the voluntary agreements with the car manufacturers to improve new car fuel efficiency by 25 per cent. by 2008.

The reduction of sulphur content of petrol from a maximum of 150 ppm to 50 ppm may result in increased energy consumption in oil refineries and hence CO_2 emissions, due to the additional processing required. The extent to which this is the case is dependent on the configuration of each individual refinery, and on other factors such as processing lower sulphur crude. The overall effect is, in the short term, likely to be an increase of less than 2 per cent. in the CO_2 emissions from refineries.

Ultra-low sulphur petrol will become mandatory throughout the EU from 2005 and the Government's CO_2 emission projections for 2010 already reflect the impact on refinery emissions of a reduction of sulphur levels in petrol.

As more vehicles are introduced onto the market, fuel efficiency improvement is expected to be larger than increases in refinery CO_2 emissions.

Environment Council (Brussels)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the outcome of the Environment Council held in Brussels on 7 November; and if he will make a statement. [137763]

Mr. Meacher: The Deputy Prime Minister and I represented the UK at the Special Environment Council in Brussels on 7 November 2000.

The main purpose of this Council was to review the EU's negotiating positions in advance of the Sixth Conference of the Parties to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change (COP6), due to take place in the Hague later this month. Ministers discussed the EU's strategy, and exchanged views on possible options which may emerge in the course of the negotiations. Council Conclusions were agreed reaffirming the EU's negotiating position on the main issues—supplementarity, the clean development mechanism, and sinks. These also stressed the Council's commitment to achieving a successful outcome at COP6.

The Commission also reported on the progress of the European Climate Change Programme, noting that while the Community as a whole was achieving stabilisation of CO2 emissions, a number of member states were not. There was a brief exchange of views between member states.

Council Conclusions to guide the final round of international negotiations on the UNEP Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants, to be held on 4–9 December 2000, were also taken without discussion.

Car Engines

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many motor cars are registered in the UK with engine sizes (a) above and (b) below 1500 cc; and how many miles were driven on average in each of the last five years in the UK by motor cars with engine sizes (i) above and (ii) below 1500 cc. [138441]

Mr. Hill: At the end of June 2000, the most recent date for which figures are available, there were 14,420,933 cars licensed in Great Britain with an engine size of greater than 1500 cc and 9,856,665 cars with an engine size of 1500 cc or less.

Average mileage of cars in Great Britain is estimated as part of the National Travel Survey. However, results are not available for individual years and are instead combined over three years to ensure a suitable level of accuracy. In the last five years, there has been little change in the average annual car mileage by engine size:

(i) The average annual distance recorded by cars of above 1,500cc was about 10,850 miles in 1997–99, compared to 11,610 miles in 1992–94.

(ii) For cars up to and including 1,500cc, the equivalent distances were 7,530 miles in 1997–99 and 7,580 miles in 1992–94.

Comparable data are not available for Northern Ireland.

EU Structural Funds (West Midlands)

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what date the Single Programming Document on aid to the West Midlands was successfully submitted to the European Commission. [138445]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Single Programming Document on aid to the West Midlands was presented to the Commission on 14 April 2000. It was confirmed as acceptable, with full retrospection of eligible spend back to 1 January 2000, in the Commission's letter of 4 May 2000 to the UK Permanent Representation to the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will report on progress in clearing proposed EU structural funds to the West Midlands with the European Commission. [138446]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The West Midlands region will receive Structural Fund moneys through a number of channels. The bulk of these will be delivered through the Objective 2 Single Programming Document. This document is still the subject of negotiation between the Government Office for the West Midlands and the European Commission.

It is difficult to predict the precise time that the negotiations will be completed. The document is then the subject of consideration by the Commission's internal services committee, a process taking about four weeks. It is currently anticipated that the document will be presented to either the January or February committees for approval.

Quality Mark (Builders)

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many builders have applied to join the Birmingham quality mark trial. [138449]

Ms Beverley Hughes: To date, two firms have been awarded a quality mark, a further 17 are in the process of assessment and are expected to complete shortly. In addition, a further 470 builders have shown their interest by requesting, and being issued with a registration pack.

Supporting People Programme

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how the Government intends to take forward the implementation in England of the Supporting People programme. [138765]

Mr. Raynsford: A consultation paper entitled 'Phased Implementation' was published on 17 May, inviting all the major stakeholders, local authorities, probation services, health authorities and provider organisations to give us their views on the implementation process for this programme. Specifically they were asked to say whether they supported the view that implementation should be phased.

The responses to the consultation paper have been most helpful to our decision making on this issue, and I am today publishing a summary of the analysis of the consultation responses. Copies are being placed in the Library and will be sent to all those who made responses.

The overwhelming response from stakeholders was that Supporting People should be implemented in all local authorities in England at the same time, and that phasing the programme would only add unnecessary complexities and cause confusion for authorities, their partner organisations, providers and service users.

Following publication of the consultation paper, the Comprehensive Spending Review made available substantial resources for the implementation of this programme, the majority of which will be used to resource implementation at a local level.

The Supporting People programme will therefore be implemented across England in April 2003.

Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his plans for the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre. [138793]

Mr. Hill: My Department has today initiated a review of the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre (QEIICC). It was established as an Executive Agency in 1989 and must be reviewed every five years in accordance with the latest Cabinet Office guidance. The last review led to a market test which resulted in a five-year service level agreement being awarded to the in-house management team from 1 April 1996.

The review will, in particular, take account of:

the role and past performance of QEIICC, its fit with Government objectives, and the relationship of QEIICC with other bodies in the public and private sectors.

It will consider all organisational options for the Agency and recommend a preferred course of action. Customers, staff and trade unions will be consulted.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Dome

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport for what reason no fee is being charged to the Ministry of Sound for the hire of secondary venues at the Dome on 31 December. [135735]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 31 October 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 14 November 2000, Official Report, column 620W.

Open University Broadcasts

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make representations to the BBC to continue Open University broadcasts. [138162]

Janet Anderson: The question of making such representations does not arise, since I understand that the BBC has said it remains fully committed to its partnership with the Open University.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many people his Department employs under the New Deal for Young People. [137957]

Mr. Lock: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Cabinet Office on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 551W.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Lord-lieutenants

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 13 July 2000, Official Report, column 646W, regarding Lord-Lieutenants, what expenditure was incurred by his Department in support of each Lord-Lieutenant for the financial year 1999–2000. [134858]

Mr. Mandelson: The information requested is contained in the table.

	Expenditure
Antrim	741.37
Armagh	506.82
Belfast	987.09
Down	822.54
Fermanagh	507.85
Londonderry	2,899.49
Tyrone	635.68

The Lord-Lieutenancy of County Londonderry is higher than that for other counties because that amount comprises two Lord-Lieutenants—Londonderry City, and Londonderry County.

Pursuant to this, it may be helpful if I provide some further information to put the figures in their proper context.

Lord-Lieutenants are appointed under current legislation by Her Majesty the Queen on the advice of the Prime Minister, following consultations locally and, where appropriate, with the First Minister. Lord-Lieutenants are much appreciated in their counties and areas, particularly as a link with the royal family and for their support of a wide range of local voluntary and community work. Lord-Lieutenants are unpaid. They may however claim expenses from central Government for certain items such as travel and other reasonable non-entertainment expenses incurred in carrying out their official duties. Amounts claimed will clearly vary according to, for example, levels of activity in each county, size and dispersal of populations, and the personal circumstances of each Lord-Lieutenant. Some choose not to claim any expenses.

In addition most counties provide varying levels of administrative support, as do some Government Departments in respect of functions carried out by Lord-Lieutenants on their behalf.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the impact of the New Deal for Young People in Northern Ireland. [136475]

Mr. Mandelson: Responsibility for this subject has been devolved to the Northern Ireland Assembly and is therefore no longer a matter for the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those Bills to which the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission has given a declaration of compatibility with human rights and also list those which have received an adverse declaration in regard to Bills presented to (a) Parliament and (b) the Northern Ireland Assembly. [136611]

Mr. George Howarth: There is no requirement for the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission to give a statement of compatibility before Parliament or the Assembly can consider a Bill; this is required from the Minister in charge. In the Assembly, this is part of the Minister's statement that the Bill is within the legislative competence of the Assembly.

Under its statutory functions, the Commission is required to advise the Assembly on whether a Bill is compatible with human rights—including the Convention rights—only when it is asked to do so and on such other occasion as the Commission thinks appropriate.

Decommissioning

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what have been the total costs to date of the Independent International Commission on Decommissioning. [138099]

Mr. Ingram: The total cost to date of the Independent International Commission on Decommissioning is IR £4,131,215. The costs are split on a 50/50 basis shared by the British and Irish Governments.

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what have been the total costs to date of the activities of the international arms inspectors. [138100]

Mr. Ingram: The amount paid to the international arms inspectors to date is IR £37,160, which includes some travel costs. This is split on a 50/50 basis shared by the British and Irish Governments.

Service Delivery Agreement

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a copy of the Northern Ireland Office's Service Delivery Agreement 2001–02 to 2003–04; and if he make copies available to hon. Members in the Vote Office. [138190]

Mr. Mandelson: Copies of the Agreement have been placed in the Library and also made available to the Vote Office.

DEFENCE

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the purpose of the chemical burns experiments conducted on pigs at Porton Down; what measures have been taken to ensure their welfare is protected; and what involvement Salisbury District Hospital has had with these experiments. [136607]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 10 November 2000]: The primary role of DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence Sector at Porton Down is to provide safe and effective protective measures for the UK and its armed forces.

Sulphur mustard (mustard gas) remains a significant chemical threat both on the battlefield and from terrorists. The burns that result from contact with mustard heal extremely slowly and are prone to potentially life-threatening infection. The studies undertaken at CBD with pigs have conclusively shown that the technique of dermabrasion can significantly accelerate the healing of such burns and reduce the risk of infection. Staff at Porton Down are now confident that dermabrasion will help save lives and reduce the suffering in any future casualties.

To pursue these studies DERA employed the skills and experience of two plastic surgeons who had trained at the Burns Unit at Salisbury District Hospital. These surgeons were not working for the Salisbury Health Care Trust at the same time as they were undertaking this research and the trust was not itself involved in this particular research. All animal research is conducted under licence authorised by the Home Office. In addition to statutory controls, an independent body, the Animal Welfare Advisory Committee (AWAC), reviews the arrangements for animal care and welfare at CBD, monitors the research programmes to ensure the highest possible standards and advises on best practice.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the cost/benefit analysis applied to the chemical burns experiments conducted on pigs at Porton Down. [136608]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 10 November 2000]: No formal cost/benefit analysis has been applied to the chemical burns experiments conducted at DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence Sector at Porton Down.

However, the work has investigated and developed techniques that improve the rate of healing by three or fourfold. These techniques will be of significant benefit to service personnel and, more generally, to civilians, by reducing the time currently spent in hospital recovering from the effects of burns form acids, alkalis and other corrosive chemicals suffered at home or in the work place.

European Security and Defence Identity

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the functions and treaty base of (a) the European Military Committee, (b) the European Military Staff and (c) the Political and Security Committee; and if he will make a statement on their relationship to NATO. [138216]

Mr. Hoon: At the Helsinki European Council in December 1999, EU member states agreed to the establishment of a Political and Security Committee (PSC), a Military Committee and a Military Staff within the European Council.

The function of the Political Security Committee is to deal with all aspects of the Common Foreign and Security Policy, including the Common European Security and Defence Policy, in accordance with the provisions of the EU Treaty. In the case of an EU-led crisis management operation, the PSC will exercise, under the authority of the Council, the political control and strategic direction of the operation. The PSC will also forward guidelines to the Military Committee.

The function of the Military Committee is to give military advice and make recommendations to the PSC and provide military direction to the Military Staff. The Chairman of the Military Committee will attend meetings of the Council when decisions with defence implications are to be taken.

The function of the Military Staff is to provide military expertise and support to the Common European Security and Defence Policy, including the conduct of EU-led operations. The Military Staff will perform early warning, situation assessment and strategic planning for Petersberg tasks.

Permanent arrangements covering the relationship between the EU and NATO on crisis management will be based upon the principle of effective mutual consultation, co-operation and transparency between the two organisations.

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137425]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 13 November 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 531W.

Military Medical Staff (Negligence)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in each year since 1990 his Department received complaints from service personnel or their families of medical negligence by military medical staff, stating in each case (a) whether the complaint was upheld by his Department in the first instance, (b) whether the complaint was upheld after recourse to legal proceedings and (c) how much compensation was paid; and if he will make a statement. [138289]

Dr. Moonie: A central record of complaints from service personnel and their families alleging medical negligence is kept only of those cases where compensation is being sought. However, prior to 1996–97 such claims were not recorded separately from other common law claims for compensation. The vast majority of the claims detailed in the table have been the subject of legal proceedings, but this does not necessarily mean that they were all heard in court. The majority of claims are settled amicably on a legal liability basis without recourse to the courts. The payment of compensation does not necessarily occur in the financial year that the claim was received.

Medical negligence claims and costs

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Number of medical negligence claims received	243	308	255	147
Number of medical negligence claims for which compensation was paid	58	58	112	79
Compensation paid (£)	2,766,821	3,545,060	9,816,803	9,688,420

Complaints procedures are available to service personnel and their families wishing to complain of medical negligence by military medical personnel. My Department aims to deal with any such complaints in a fair and timely manner.

Eurofighter Typhoon

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason the United Kingdom version of the Eurofighter Typhoon will not be armed with a cannon. [137926]

Mr. Hoon: The improved minimum range of capability of Eurofighter's Advanced Short Range Air-to-Air Missile over previous such missiles, together with the pattern of operations over the last decade, mean that the gun now has only a minimal operational utility, and this is outweighed by its support, fatigue and training cost implications.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is concerning a ground attack role for Eurofighter Typhoon. [137905]

Mr. Hoon: Eurofighter will be a multi-role aircraft, able to carry both air-to-air and air-to-ground weaponry. Its priority role, however, remains air-to-air. With Tornado GR4 and Harriers continuing in-service for many years, there is less immediate need to arm Eurofighter for its air-to-ground role at its entry into service. Existing plans progressively to enhance Eurofighter's capability in both air-to-air and air-to-ground roles, from its entry into service onwards, remain unchanged.

Former Prisoners of War (Compensation)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about compensation payments to former British servicemen and women who were held in Nazi concentration camps during the Second World War. [138158]

Dr. Moonie: In 1964 the German Government agreed a £1 million settlement to compensate British victims of Nazi persecution. All those, including British service personnel, who were held in Nazi concentration camps were eligible under this scheme.

RAF Leeming

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many deaths of personnel at RAF Leeming occurred in the past three months; how many aircraft based there crashed; and if he will make a statement. [138325]

Mr. Spellar: Three personnel based at RAF Leeming have died in the last three months. In the same period, one aircraft based at RAF Leeming has crashed. The aircrew ejected safely.

Hospital Ships

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an order for new hospital ships. [138240]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 13 November 2000]: We have no plans to procure hospital ships, which are subject to restrictions under the Geneva Convention that limit their utility. We are continuing, however, to define the requirement for a new Primary Casualty Receiving Capability, to enhance afloat medical support. A number of procurement options are under consideration, and the timing of an order will be determined by the chosen option.

Air Sea Rescue

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department is involved in of the future role of the Army and Navy in the provision of air sea rescue services around the British Isles; and if he will make a statement. [138331]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 November 2000]: There are no studies in progress which are looking at the future role of the Army and Royal Navy in the provision of air sea rescue services around the British Isles.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his assessment is of the relative effectiveness of the different types of helicopters used in air sea rescue around the British Isles. [138330]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 November 2000]: I can only comment upon the military Search and Rescue helicopters operated by the Royal Air Force and the Royal Navy, as the responsibility for civil SAR rests with other Government Departments.

The military SAR force operates an all Sea King fleet within the British Isles and these aircraft are highly effective in carrying out this role.

HEALTH

Mental Health Act 1983

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 17 July 2000, Official Report, column 73W, when he will make an announcement on his proposals for reform of the Mental Health Act 1983; and if at or before that time hon. Members will have access to his Department's summary of responses to the Green Paper. [135669]

Mr. Hutton: In my reply to my hon. Friend of 28 July 2000, Official Report, column 987W, I stated that we will set out our plans for reform of the Mental Health Act 1983 in a White Paper to be published before Christmas.

We are today publishing the Department's summary of responses to the Green Paper, "Reform of the Mental Health Act 1983 Proposals for Consultation". A copy of the summary is being sent to hon. Members and, where authors have agreed, copies of their responses to the Green Paper have been placed in the Library.

NDPBs (Scotland)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the non-departmental public bodies responsible to him which have duties relating to Scotland, indicating their budget and staffing in Scotland, the number of Scottish board members and their emoluments. [137688]

Ms Stuart: The following non-departmental public bodies, sponsored by the Department, have a remit which covers Great Britain or the United Kingdom.

Administration of Radioactive Substances Advisory Committee
Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens
British Pharmacopoeia Commission
Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work
Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment
Gene Therapy Advisory Committee
Genetics and Insurance Committee

The remaining information is not held centrally in the form requested but general information on expenditure, staffing, board members and levels of remuneration is published annually in the Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies". Copies of "Public Bodies 1999" have been placed in the Libraries of the House. "Public Bodies

Cannabis

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the anticipated length is of the clinical trials to test the safety and efficacy of using cannabis for medicinal purposes. [137894]

Mr. Hutton: The duration of a programme of clinical trials to demonstrate the safety and efficacy of a new medicine is determined by the company developing it.

Doubly Incontinent Patients

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy that the NHS should provide free care for doubly incontinent patients on a drip and confined to bed 24 hours a day. [138070]

Mr. Hutton: All residents of nursing homes will have their nursing care needs assessed by the National Health Service. Subject to parliamentary approval, the NHS will be responsible for providing registered nursing care free. When people have health needs at such a level that they need continuing health care in a nursing home, the NHS will be, as now, responsible for meeting the full costs.

Hospital Building

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the new hospital bids expected to be submitted for selection to the Capital Project Advisory Committee this year. [138455]

Mr. Hutton: A decision will be made by the end of November on the hospital development schemes which will go forward for consideration at the next prioritisation round.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to announce the next round of hospital building schemes. [138456]

Mr. Hutton: The start of a process to identify the next round of major hospital building schemes was announced on 14 November.

Cannabis Psychosis

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cannabis psychosis cases there were in each of the last 10 years. [138451]

Ms Stuart: The table shows data from the hospital episodes statistics system (HES) and relates to in-patients with a primary diagnosis of psychotic disorder due to cannabinoids who have finished their hospital episodes under the care of a consultant. There are no comparable data prior to 1995–96.

We know that cannabis can have a range of adverse health effects in addition to those risks associated with smoking tobacco. The Department is currently funding research into patterns of use and the health effects of long-term heavy use of cannabis.

Estimated finished consultant episodes with a primary diagnosis of psychotic disorder due to cannabinoids, England, 1995–96 to 1998–99

	Number
1995–96	360
1996–97	280
1997–98	310
1998–99	300

Notes:
1. Figures have been rounded to the nearest ten.
2. Figures for 1998–99 are provisional as no adjustments have been made for shortfalls in data.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Energy Market

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on further measures to liberalise the energy market. [138612]

Mr. Byers: I am satisfied that the programme of reforms of the electricity market set out in the Government's 1998 White Paper is now substantially complete. I am therefore lifting the stricter consents policy on gas powered stations with immediate effect.

We considered the stricter gas consents policy necessary as it provided a breathing space for existing coal fired power stations until distortions in the electricity market were ironed out.

I recognise that the ending of the stricter gas consents policy will create a new market and new challenges for coal which is why we are putting in place an aid scheme for the industry which this morning has been approved by the European Commission.

I am aware that the end of the stricter gas consents policy is eagerly awaited by industry. New power stations are important drivers of economic growth both nationally and regionally:

They bring more competition to the power generation market and so put downward pressure on electricity prices for everyone's benefit;

They can provide cheap power and heat to nearby industry;

They make businesses more competitive and create new investment and job opportunities around the country; and

They also contribute to secure electricity supplies.

I am announcing today decisions on five power station cases which had been placed on hold during the stricter gas consents policy. These power stations are Carrington, Spalding, Fleetwood, Raventhorpe and the Isle of Grain. I am also approving the application in respect of the Langage power station.

It is important developers considering new power station proposals explore the opportunities to use combined heat and power (CHP). CHP can make a major contribution to reducing emissions as well as bringing other benefits such as increased efficiency. We will be publishing guidance to developers on this matter soon.

I have also given careful consideration to the impact of lifting the stricter consents policy on the coal industry.

The Government's policy remains that it is for the coal industry to find its own place in a competitive energy market. However it is the task of Government to help industry through a period of change. That is why we are introducing a coal subsidy scheme. This will provide the industry with transitional funding so that it is able to respond to the challenges of the new market conditions that arise from the lifting of the stricter gas consents policy.

Office for Harmonization in the Internal Market

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the (a) role and (b) mandate of the Office for Harmonization in the Internal Market, with particular reference to the nature of the harmonization concerned. [138080]

Dr. Howells: The Office for Harmonization in the Internal Market deals with Community-wide intellectual property rights. It is responsible for the registration and subsequent administration of Community trade marks. This role is likely to expand following adoption of a Community Regulation which will create Community-wide rights for industrial designs. It is self-financing from fees paid by businesses who use the system, and expects to receive some 60,000 applications for Community trade marks this year. The Office began its work on 1 September 1994 in Alicante, Spain.

Haulage Companies

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many haulage companies were declared bankrupt each year since 1995. [138279]

Dr. Howells: The following table shows company compulsory liquidations and individual bankruptcies for the road transport industry in England and Wales, 1995–2000. The road transport industry includes road haulage, car hire, taxis, bus services, and other road passenger transport—detailed figures solely for road haulage are not available.

Insolvencies: Road transport industry (England and Wales)

Year	Company compulsory liquidations	Individual bankruptcy orders
1995	204	824
1996	197	1,008
1997	174	971
1998	174	829
1999	152	979

Late Payment

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many invoices his Department paid in 1999–2000; and how many of these were paid within 30 days of receipt or from the date a supplier dispute was resolved. [138401]

Ms Hewitt: In 1999–2000, DTI paid 46,500 invoices, of which 93 per cent. were paid within 30 days of receipt or from the date a supplier dispute was resolved.

Cluster Munitions (Exports)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences were granted for the export of cluster munitions in each of the last five years. [137690]

Dr. Howells: The export of cluster munitions is controlled under entries ML3 and ML4 in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, commonly known as the Military List. Other munitions are also controlled under these entries. It would entail disproportionate cost to examine the records to establish which, if any, of the licences issued in the last five years covered the export of cluster munitions.

Details of SIELs and OIELs issued between 2 May 1997 and 31 December 1999 have been set out in the Government's Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls, published by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office; copies are in the Library of the House. The Reports list by country of destination the numbers of export licences issued and refused in each equipment category and give details of the military equipment for which licences have been granted.

For the periods not covered by the Annual Reports, the Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated, and the results are set out in the table.

Individual licences issued covering the export of goods with the ratings ML3 and ML4 to consignees or end-users in all destinations

Issued from	SIELs	OIELs
1 January to 31 December 1996	937	33
1 January to 1 May 1997	306	9
1 January to 2 November 2000	754	27

This information should be considered in light of the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) on 27 July 1999; Official Report, columns 307–08W.

In addition, goods on the Military List may have been exported to certain destinations under certain Open General Licences; copies of all Open General Export Licences are placed in the Library of the House.

Military Equipment Exports

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the countries to which the UK has allowed the export of military equipment in the last 12 months. [137382]

Dr. Howells: The most recent information is set out in the Government's 1999 Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls which was published by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The Report lists by country of destination the numbers of export licences issued and refused in each equipment category and gives details of the military equipment for which licences have been granted.

ADSL Services

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what actions he intends to take to ensure that suppliers of ADSL services do not dilute contention ratios beyond those quoted in their sales literature; and if he will make a statement. [138329]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 November 2000]: ADSL service suppliers are expected to specify a number of quality/performance parameters as part of their sales literature. It is likely that the suppliers will specify contention ratio as one of the quality parameters within a service contract and they will be commercially obligated to fulfil their contractual requirements concerning quality of service. Competition in supply of ADSL services will enable customers to select their preferred ADSL supplier based on quality and price. It is therefore for market forces to determine which services consumers are likely to demand and what price consumers are willing to pay for such services based on service quality information.

Milk Marque

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on legal proceedings against his Department in respect of its division of Milk Marque into three separate processing companies. [137974]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 10 November 2000]: Milk Marque and the National Farmers Union started judicial review proceedings last year. Their main argument is that it was unlawful for the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to carry out an investigation under domestic competition law and for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to act on their report. The High Court has referred certain questions to the European Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling. When the ECJ has given its views the proceedings in the High court can continue. This legal process is unlikely to be quick.

TrustUK

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much financial support was given to TrustUK in (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000 to date. [137842]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 10 November 2000]: The Government have not provided any funding to TrustUK, which is an organisation led by the private sector. The Government do however strongly support TrustUK; the Minister for Small Business and E-commerce took part in its launch in July. Officials of the Department of Trade and Industry and the Office of Fair Trading have contributed to the development of TrustUK and have taken part in its process of approving codes of practice for e-commerce. The Department of Trade and Industry has hosted meetings of TrustUK and is considering what further assistance it can give.

Newspapers and Magazines

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer to the Competition Commission the impact on retail newsagents of W.H. Smith's proposal to extend their newspaper and magazine wholesale operation. [138291]

Dr. Howells: Under UK competition legislation, it is for the Director General of Fair Trading to investigate allegations of anti-competitive behaviour and if appropriate make a reference to the Competition Commission under the Fair Trading Act 1973 or take action under the Competition Act 1998.

The Director General is aware of proposals by W.H. Smith to change distribution arrangements for magazines. He is monitoring developments and will consider any evidence of anti-competitive behaviour.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will discuss with the Competition Commission the operation of its proposed code of practice in respect of the relationship between supermarkets and suppliers with regard to newspapers and magazines. [138290]

Dr. Howells: The Competition Commission has no role in implementing any remedies it recommends.

The Director General of Fair Trading has been asked to approach those supermarket chains with 8 per cent. or more of the market to agree a Code of Practice concerning relations between supermarkets and suppliers which would meet the concerns identified by the Competition Commission. This process is ongoing.

Nickel Directive

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further discussions he plans to have with, and representations he plans to make to, the European Commission regarding the Nickel Directive. [138072]

Dr. Howells: The Directive has been implemented by The Dangerous Substances and Preparations (Nickel) (Safety) Regulations 2000.

On 2 May 2000, my officials wrote to the European Commission supporting another member state in its request for a review of the Directive. The Commission replied on 8 June 2000, confirming its intention to review the Directive in the light of technical progress since the Directive's adoption in 1994. Reports are currently being gathered and the findings may be referred to the Scientific Committee on Toxicology, Ecotoxicology and the Environment for an independent assessment. On that basis, the Commission expects to examine an adaptation to the Directive in 2001.

I have also instructed my officials to liaise with Industry now on these issues. This will enable the UK to make cogent and reasoned representations to the Commission and to obtain the optimum solution for Industry and the Consumer.

Climate Change

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what strategic measures he is taking to allow for environmental changes induced by climate change. [137181]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment gave on 13 November 2000, Official Report, columns 469–70W.

Regional Venture Capital Funds

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the proposed regional venture capital funds will be cleared by the European Commission. [138447]

Mr. Byers: As soon as possible.

Ministerial Cars

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the cost was in each of the past three years of petrol for his Department's fleet of ministerial cars; and how many vehicles there are in that fleet. [135028]

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the cost was in each of the past three years for petrol for his Department's ministerial cars; and how many cars there are in that fleet. [134579]

Dr. Howells: Six cars are used by Ministers in my Department. On fuel consumption, I refer the hon. Members to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office on 14 November 2000, Official Report, column 552W, for the Government Car and Despatch Agency.

Non-departmental Public Bodies (Scotland)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the non-departmental public bodies responsible to him which have duties relating to Scotland, indicating their budget and staffing in Scotland, the number of Scottish board members and their emoluments. [137696]

Dr. Howells: The following non-departmental public bodies, sponsored by my Department, have a remit which covers Great Britain or the United Kingdom.

Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service
British Hallmarking Council
Coal Authority
Gas and Electricity Consumer Council
National Consumer Council[1]
Post Office Users' National Council[2]
Design Council
Competition Commission
National Research Development Council
Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council
Council for the Central Laboratory of the Research Councils
Economic and Social Research Council
Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council
Medical Research Council
Natural Environment Research Council
Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council
Simpler Trade Procedures Board
United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority
Advisory Committee on Cleaner Coal Technology
Aerospace Committee
Council for Science and Technology
Energy Advisory Panel
Foresight Steering Group
Fuel Cell Advisory Panel
LINK/Teaching Company Scheme Board
Low Pay Commission
Measurement Advisory Committee
OSO Industry Board
Partnership Fund Assessment Panel
Renewable Energy Advisory Committee
Small Business Council
Small Business Investment Task Force[3]
Spectrum Management Advisory Group
Standing Advisory Committee on Industrial Property
Central Arbitration Committee
Copyright Tribunal
Employment Appeal Tribunal
Employment Tribunals
Insolvency Practitioners' Tribunal
Persons Hearing Consumer Credit Licensing Appeals
Persons Hearing Estate Agents Appeals

[1] The National Consumer Council has a sub-committee dealing with Scottish issues—The Scottish Consumer Council

[2] There is a separate Post Office Users' Council for Scotland

[3] The SBITF's remit covers England but advice is made available to the devolved Administrations.

Internet (Price Transparency)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what studies his Department has undertaken on the competition effects of increased price transparency due to use of the internet; and if he will make a statement. [137331]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 584W.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Drug Abuse

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those projects his Department supports highlighting the dangers of drug abuse to children and young people. [137340]

Jacqui Smith: DfEE guidance Circular number 4/95 sets out the statutory position on drug education in schools and was supplemented by the guidance "Protecting Young People" (1998) which gives detailed advice to identify what works in drug education and how best to take that forward effectively. To further support schools in the dissemination of effective drug education DfEE in partnership with the Department of Health commissioned the Standing Conference On Drug Abuse (SCODA) to product further guidance for schools, the three "R's", "the right approach", "the right response" and "the right choice". DfEE has also made funding available in partnership with the charity DrugScope to identify, develop , promote and disseminate good practice in drug and alcohol education and prevention programmes for young people, parents and professionals in schools and in informal settings. DfEE will continue to fund the dissemination of guidance and support materials.

Spending on drug education will rise from £7.5 million this year to £17.5 million in 2003–04 (a 133 per cent. increase). This funding is available to all LEAs through the Standards Fund. It will help teachers deliver a drug education programme tailor-made to the needs of all young people which equips them with the knowledge to recognise the dangers of drug misuse and make informed choices. It will also fund drug advisers to work directly with schools, training costs of the Connexions personal advisers for 13–19-year-olds and ensure that key partners are engaged in developing drug education programmes relevant to the needs of the local community.

We have now established a solid base for drug education in schools. A recent Ofsted survey (July 2000) showed 93 per cent. of secondary and 75 per cent. primary schools now had their own anti-drug policies.

Disaffected Pupils

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his assessment of the current trend in (a) permanent exclusions and (b) fixed term exclusions. [138266]

Jacqui Smith: The rate of permanent exclusions is falling. In 1998–99, the latest year for which data are available, there were 10,400 permanent exclusions compared to 12,300 in 1997–98—a 15 per cent. reduction. We are on course to achieve the national target of 8,400 by 2002.

Data on fixed period exclusions are not collected centrally, but Ofsted estimated in its report "Exclusions from secondary schools" (1995–96) that there are around 100,000 a year. Some of these may be repeat exclusions of the same child.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils are officially classified as Education Otherwise. [138267]

Jacqui Smith: In the January 2000 Annual Schools' Census, nearly 24,000 students were reported as receiving education otherwise than at school, including those at Pupil Referral Units. We do not collect centrally the number of pupils educated at home by their parents.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions his Department has had with excluded young people about the causes of their disaffection. [138292]

Jacqui Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him to his supplementary question on 26 October 2000, Official Report, columns 368–69 and to my answer of 9 November 2000, Official Report, columns 358–59W.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he has taken to ensure teachers are able to deal effectively with poor behaviour. [138293]

Jacqui Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 26 October 2000, Official Report, column 368, and that given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for School Standards on 26 October 2000, Official Report, column 293W.

As a result of representations from headteachers, we recently issued new guidance for exclusion appeal panels which indicates that the headteacher's decision to exclude should not be overridden in a range of circumstances including where there is violence or the threat of violence.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of poor behaviour on (a) the achievement of individual schools and (b) the morale of teachers. [138294]

Jacqui Smith: On (a) I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 12 April 2000, Official Report, column 184W.

On (b) we are aware that low morale can sometimes result if teachers feel unable to deal adequately with poor behaviour. That is why we are providing record levels of funding to help schools better manage poor behaviour and why we have made clear that where necessary headteachers can permanently exclude the most disruptive or violent pupils.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure greater recognition of the achievement of schools and teachers who deal most effectively with disaffected pupils. [138295]

Jacqui Smith: Disaffection is often manifested by irregular attendance or prolonged truancy. As part of our wider drive to cut truancy levels, the 50 schools which achieve the most in cutting truancy levels in challenging circumstances will have the chance to win a "Truancy Buster" award of up to £10,000 to help them act as Excellence Centres. The first awards will be made early in the new year.

Beacon status is another way in which we recognise the achievement of schools, and tackling disaffection is one area in which Beacon schools are working to help spread effective practices to other schools.

Special Needs

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what decision he has reached on whether statements of special needs will (a) specify or (b) otherwise set out assistance from a local authority in the proposed code and regulations on special needs. [138324]

Jacqui Smith: We are considering the broad range of representations received to these and other issues relating to the draft revised code and proposed amendments to the regulations. We will decide shortly on the appropriate final wording in the Code of Practice to underpin our determination to achieve both clarity and specificity, as has always been our intention.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

ERDP

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what projections his Department has made for the number of successful claimants per year for each component scheme of the ERDP. [136498]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 6 November 2000]: We will publish shortly and post on the MAFF website the indicative impact indicators and targets for the ERDP (Table 2). These focus on what the ERDP might deliver, eg the number of training days provided, not the number of claimants.

Bovine TB

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what potential sources of infection he has eliminated in respect of the recent outbreak of bovine TB in South Shropshire. [137552]

Ms Quin: The recent outbreak of bovine TB in cattle in South Shropshire is still under veterinary investigation.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to test badgers for evidence of TB in areas where bovine TB has recently emerged. [137561]

Ms Quin: There is no reliable test for bovine TB in live badgers. All badger carcases from the Government's badger culling trial are tested for bovine TB at post mortem. Additionally, a sample of badger carcases found on roads or on farms will be tested for bovine TB in a new survey in seven counties of England, of which Shropshire is one.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent assessment he has made of the effect of badger protection upon the health of the UK cattle herd. [137554]

Ms Quin: The Krebs report concluded that the sum of evidence strongly supports the view that in Britain badgers are a significant source of TB infection in cattle. However, it went on to say that it is not possible to quantify what contribution badgers make to cattle infection. The Government accepted the report's recommendation that MAFF should set up a field trial to quantify the impact of culling badgers on TB in cattle. The trial is in progress and results are expected no later than 2004.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what his policy and practice is regarding post mortems on badgers killed on public highways. [137559]

Ms Quin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew) on 6 November 2000, Official Report, column 48W.

Abattoirs

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent assessment he has made of the effect of abattoir closures upon the (a) length and (b) time of journeys for animals consigned for slaughter. [137558]

Mr. Morley: We have no plans for such an assessment. The Welfare of Animal (Transport) Order 1997 sets rules, including journey time limits, for farm livestock in transit, including on journeys to slaughter.

SEAC

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was (a) the total amount of remuneration paid to members of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee in each year since its inception and (b) the highest remuneration of any one member in these years. [137577]

Ms Quin: This information is available only at disproportionate cost. However, from April 2000, the maximum daily allowances for attending SEAC meetings, including preparatory time, were £259.00 and £219.00 for the Chairman and the members respectively.

Flooding

Mr. Willis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what support his Department offers to private landowners to repair damage to river banks caused by flood water. [137518]

Mr. Morley: None. Grant aid from this Department for new and improved capital schemes is directed to the flood and coastal defence operating authorities—the Environment Agency, Local Authorities and Internal Drainage Boards.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what effect the installation of new flood defences at Pateley Bridge has had on water levels in the River Nidd at Knaresborough during the early November floods; [137517]

(2) what action the Environment Agency took to alert riparian businesses and home owners on the River Nidd at Knaresborough about the probability of flooding in advance of the recent floods; and how many properties were affected by the floods. [137519]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency's staff in the north-east are still fully committed to dealing with the impact of the floods in that region, and it would be inappropriate to divert them at this point of time. I have asked the Agency once the immediate work is completed, in conjunction with their partners, to produce a full report on the flooding, its effects, how the flood warning and emergency response worked and what lessons we can learn; this report should be available by Easter. In terms of the specific questions I will write to the hon. Member as soon as the information can be obtained.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Defence concerning the deployment of troops to assist in areas of West Sussex disrupted by recent flooding; and if he will make a statement. [137616]

Mr. Morley: There are standing arrangements in cases of serious flooding for the Environment Agency to request for military assistance from the Ministry of Defence. In the case of West Sussex, the military has been used in the Chichester area for sandbagging duties and is on standby for bridging work around the City. It has not yet been deemed necessary to call upon the services of the military elsewhere in West Sussex.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will instruct the Environment Agency to re-assess the risks of flooding in Buckinghamshire. [138003]

Mr. Morley: MAFF has set in place a series of high level targets one of which is for the Environment Agency to ensure that inspections of flood defences, main rivers and critical ordinary watercourses are undertaken and, as a result of these inspections, to report to the Ministry on its assessment of flood risk. These reports are due to be provided by April 2001.

To this end the Environment Agency is undertaking surveys of all defences and structures on main rivers within Buckinghamshire. Local authorities and internal drainage boards are in the process of identifying critical ordinary watercourses, and inspecting flood defences upon these, assisted by the agency teams.

North Sea Fishery

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) Finnish, (b) Spanish and (c) Portuguese vessels he estimates will fish North Sea stocks after 31 December 2002; how many vessels (i) from the UK and (ii) in total fish these stocks at present; and if he will commission a study on the effect of such fishing on stocks. [137899]

Mr. Morley: As things currently stand, from 1 January 2003, vessels from Finland, Spain and Portugal will only be entitled to fish for non-quota stocks in the North Sea. The number of vessels from Finland, Spain and Portugal that fish in the North Sea after 31 December 2002 will depend on commercial decisions taken by the fishermen in these countries. It is not possible to estimate accurately how many vessels will chose to fish in the North Sea. The number is likely to be extremely low. In any case they will have no access to any stock covered by quota arrangements as all main commercial stocks are in this category.

945 UK vessels currently fish for North Sea stocks. We do not keep information on other member states vessels fishing in the North Sea.

Foreign Fishing Vessels

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the report of the Irish Government into the Sea Horse-Exodus incident; and if he will make a statement on its impact on his policy towards UK-flagged foreign fishing vessels. [138165]

Mr. Morley: The report of the Irish Government into the collision between the Sea Horse and the Exodus in March 1997 has not yet been published. It is therefore too early to say what impact it may have on policy towards UK flagged foreign owned fishing vessels.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his position towards common EU monitoring procedures for the Common Fisheries Policy, indicating the proposals which are under discussion. [138183]

Mr. Morley: I am aware that the Commission is looking at the division of monitoring and control work between national authorities and the Community. It has not issued any proposals and there have been no formal discussions with member states. We shall, of course, give careful consideration to any proposals that may emerge.

Cetaceans

Mr. Brake: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he plans to take to address the issue of cetacean bycatch in United Kingdom waters; if he will raise cetacean bycatch in the Council of Ministers; if he will raise the issue of protection of cetaceans in the 2002 review of the Common Fisheries Policy; and if he will make a statement. [138016]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 November 2000]: The Sea Mammal Research Unit is currently undertaking a three-year research project funded by my Department which will monitor bycatch in a number of fisheries not previously assessed. It will also attempt to establish definitively why harbour porpoises become entangled in gill nets, with a view to developing suitable mitigation measures.

We are also proposing to produce, jointly with DETR, a strategy for the protection of all cetacean species. This will build on that already established for the harbour porpoise.

The Commission and other member states are already well aware of UK concerns on this issue. The Commission have made clear that addressing the problem of cetacean bycatch is one of the issues for coverage in the 2002 Review. I have already raised this issue in the Fisheries Council.

Community Plant Variety Office

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the (a) budget and (b) purpose of the Community Plant Variety Office. [138078]

Ms Quin: The purpose of the Community Plant Variety Office (CPVO) is to administer a system of intellectual property rights for plant varieties valid throughout the European Community and to evaluate and decide upon applications for community plant variety rights. The CPVO is self-financing and recovers its costs through fees charged to plant breeders. The CPVO sets a budget each year, which includes estimates of all the office's anticipated revenue and expenditure. The budget is subject to approval by the CPVO Administrative Council, which comprises representatives of all member states and the Commission.

Organic Farming

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reason farmers farming organically may not dispose of surplus organic manure to farms not being organically farmed. [137542]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 14 November 2000]: This requirement is part of Council Regulation (EEC) 2092/91 (as amended). Its intention is to ensure that there is a balance within organic farming between livestock production and land available for the disposal of manure. We shall be assessing the impact of this requirement as part of a review of the effects of the implementation of the Regulations.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the need for the use by organic farms of synthetic amino acids in poultry feed. [137543]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 14 November 2000]: The use of synthetic amino acids is prohibited by Council Regulation (EEC) 2092/91 (as amended), but we have received a number of industry representations saying that they are important in commercial poultry production. We shall be assessing the need as part of a review of the effects of the implementation of the Regulations.

Poultry

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those members of UKROFS who have particular expertise in poultry matters, giving in each case the applicable qualifications. [137544]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 14 November 2000]: Three members of the board of UKROFS have expertise in poultry matters. Two have no formal qualifications but the third has an Msc in Animal Production with a special interest in and experience of poultry production systems. In addition the board has available to it advice from experts within MAFF.

Pig Disease Eradication Fund

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money is held by Her Majesty's Government by way of statutory levy in the Pig Disease Eradication Fund. [138413]

Ms Quin: The Meat and Livestock Commission holds a capital sum of £605,000 on behalf of the Pig Disease Eradication Fund Ltd.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Middle East

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made about the use of children in recent violent clashes between Israelis and Palestinians. [137208]

Mr. Hain: I deplore the fact that children have been caught up in recent violence in the Occupied Territories, which has led to tragic loss of life and casualties among children. I support the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights' recent statement that the protection of children must be an absolute priority for both parties.

Ghana

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of preparations for the elections in Ghana in December. [137941]

Mr. Hain: The UK Government have provided assistance to Ghana's Electoral Commission to help eliminate electoral fraud. We are sending a team of thirteen observers to monitor the electoral process. It is important that the elections are held in a free and democratic manner.

Biological Weapons

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the Biopreparat organisation in Russia and the manufacture of biological weapons. [137929]

Mr. Hain: We are aware of widely-publicised accounts that Biopreparat was originally established to support the biological weapons programme of the former Soviet Union. We do not however comment on intelligence matters.

Russia is a State Party and Depositary Government of the Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention (BTWC) and is currently involved in negotiations on a legally-binding Protocol to strengthen the Convention. The UK Believes that this Protocol will improve transparency and provide internationally agreed mechanisms with which to pursue compliance concerns.

Non-departmental Public Bodies (Scotland)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the non-departmental public bodies responsible to him which have duties relating to Scotland, indicating their budget and staffing in Scotland, the number of Scottish board members and their emoluments. [137700]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office 2000 Annual Report, held in the House Library, contains a list of non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department which have a remit that covers the United Kingdom. Information on board members and remuneration are contained within. The remaining information is not held centrally in the form requested, but general information on expenditure and staffing is published annually in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies". Copies of "Public Bodies 1999" have been placed in the Libraries of the House and "Public Bodies 2000" is due to be published next month. Information on board membership and remuneration can also be downloaded from the Cabinet Office Public Appointments Directory website www.cabinet-office.gov.uk.

Foreign Policy Centre

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role of the Foreign Policy Centre in formulating his policy. [138181]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Foreign Office welcomes ideas from outside organisations on all areas of its work. It is established practice for Foreign Office Ministers and officials to have regular contact with policy institutes and NGOs, including the Foreign Policy Centre, and to consider their views when formulating policy. Policy institutes and NGOs can also influence policy through their contributions to a wider public debate.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial support his Department gives the Foreign Policy Centre. [138182]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Foreign Policy Centre has received no money from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, nor do we have any plans to provide financial assistance.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has received from the United States in respect of the future of DERA. [138161]

Mr. Battle: None. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and representatives of his Department are, however, in contact with the US Administration on this subject.

EU Council Representatives

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the functions and treaty base of the Secretary General/High Representative of the Council, and the extent to which his functions are autonomous of national Governments of the member states. [138217]

Mr. Vaz: The role and functions of the Secretary General/High Representative are set out in Article 207 of the Treaty establishing the European Community and in Articles 18 and 26 of the Treaty on European Union. Article 26 in particular provides that

> The Secretary-General of the Council, High Representative for the common foreign and security policy, shall assist the Council in matters coming within the scope of the common foreign and security policy, in particular through contributing to the formulation, preparation and implementation of policy decisions, and, when appropriate and acting on behalf of the Council at the request of the Presidency, through conducting political dialogue with third parties.

It is clear from these provisions that the Secretary General/High Representative's role is to assist the Council, which remains the primary EU decision-making body for matters of external policy. It follows that the Secretary General/High Representative is answerable to the Council for all his actions in the name of the EU.

Defence Attachés

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the total (a) direct and (b) associated costs of defence attachés will be in financial year 2000–01. [138317]

Mr. Hain: The Ministry of Defence accounts for the pay, allowances and certain other costs of defence attachés and defence advisers. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office accounts for office and residential accommodation, as well as the administration costs at overseas Posts in supporting the activities of such staff. The estimated Foreign and Commonwealth costs in 2000–01 are £14 million.

Diego Garcia

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the extent of the exclusion zones around and above Diego Garcia; and what purpose the zones serve. [138296]

Mr. Battle: There are no exclusion zones. Diego Garcia has a three mile territorial sea, within which activities are restricted in accordance with the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea, and an area of controlled airspace that extends five miles out and 2,500ft upwards from the runway there.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requirement there is on the US authorities to notify him of progress with their research undertaken on Diego Garcia. [138297]

Mr. Battle: We would expect the US authorities to seek our approval before conducting any research programmes on Diego Garcia.

GCHQ (Recruitment)

Mr. HomeRobertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the recruitment statistics for GCHQ in 1999; and what the same figures were in 1998. [138792]

Mr. Robin Cook: GCHQ notified the Civil Service Commissioners that, as a result of recruitment schemes run in 1999, 241 individuals have joined the Department or are awaiting completion of the application process. This compares with 187 reported for 1998 recruitment schemes. In addition, nine former members of staff were reappointed in 1999, compared with eight in 1998.

WALES

Environment (Deeside)

6. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary with regard to the environment on Deeside. [136867]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales regularly meets the First Minister and discusses a wide range of issues. I also hold regular meetings with the Assembly Minister for Transport, Planning and the Environment.

Training

7. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to meet the chairman of the National Education and Training Council in Wales to discuss training issues. [136868]

Mr. Hanson: I have no immediate plans to meet the Chairman of the National Education and Training Council in Wales.

Pre-Budget Report (Women)

8. Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the impact of proposals in the pre-Budget Report as they specifically affect women in Wales. [136869]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend announced a number of measures that will benefit women in Wales.

Women will benefit from improved fuel allowances, an increase in pension entitlements and also from improved New Deal measures. This Government welcome the invaluable contribution that women make to family life and economic stability, and we are determined to support families and provide the best opportunities for women.

Flooding

9. Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he has identified in rainfall trends which will require additional flood management planning for Wales. [136870]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Identifying such trends, on a UK basis, is part of the research at the Hadley Centre and UK Climate Impacts Programme. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister recently announced that the Government intend to enhance and speed up the research to improve our prediction and assessment of the effects of climate change. The Government also intend to ask a senior independent engineer to carry out a review of technical approaches to flood alleviation.

13. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on the recent floods. [136874]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have regular discussions with my right hon. Friend on a range of issues affecting Wales, which have of course included the recent floods. A meeting of Ministers, chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister, was held on 4 November to discuss the flooding issues. Sue Essex, Assembly Minister for Environment, Transport and Planning and one of my senior officials also attended this meeting.

Anti-drugs Strategy

10. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary about the UK anti-drugs co-ordinator's second national plan and current levels of drugs misuse in Wales. [136871]

Mr. Hanson: I meet the Assembly Secretaries on a regular basis, when we discuss a range of issues. I am aware that Jane Hutt, Assembly Minister for Health and Social Services, has welcomed the report by Keith Hellawell.

Crime (Young People)

11. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary about policies to reduce crime by young people in Wales. [136872]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet the First Minister regularly to discuss a number of subjects, including this one. The Assembly takes great interest in the work of the Youth Justice Board and Youth Offending Teams in Wales, in view of their key role in safeguarding the social wellbeing, health and education of young people in Wales. Wales received some £5 million of the £85 million made available for the Youth Justice Board in the last Comprehensive Spending Review. In addition, the Assembly is providing a grant of £371,000 to the voluntary organisation, NACRO Cymru, to provide advice and guidance to Youth Offending Teams and local agencies in Wales.

Miners (Compensation)

12. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on progress in paying compensation to miners in Wales. [136873]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I regularly meet my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and other DTI Ministers and discuss a wide range of issues, including miners compensation.

The Government are working hard to bring about greater co-operation from all concerned in order to speed up payments to miners for their claims. In Wales £24.5 million has now been paid out in compensation, £18.8 million of that for respiratory diseases.

Wales Office

14. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff work in the Wales Office; and what he expects the cost to be for running this office for the year ending March 2001. [136875]

Mr. Paul Murphy: There are currently 43 full-time equivalent staff working for the Wales Office, with two staff who work part-time. The running cost budget for the Wales Office is £2,250,000 for the year ending 31 March 2001.

Job Losses (Panasonic and Sony)

15. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he was first informed that there were to be job losses at Panasonic and Sony in Wales. [136876]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Government were alerted to the announcements on a confidential basis very shortly before their publication. Such decisions are ultimately commercial ones for the companies to take themselves to ensure their long-term future. It is not the Government's policy to intervene in such decisions.

BSE Inquiry Report

16. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on actions he has taken since the publication of the BSE Inquiry report of Lord Phillips on the relationship between civil servants of the National Assembly and those in Whitehall Departments. [136877]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The situation is now different from that on which Lord Phillips' Inquiry reported, in that relationships between civil servants of the National Assembly for Wales and those in Whitehall Departments are governed by the Memorandum of Understanding between the UK Government and the devolved Administrations supported by a series of Devolution Guidance Notes (DGN). DGN 1 deals with working arrangements between officials. An important part of my role is to ensure that these arrangements work smoothly.

I have, however, looked carefully at the report to ensure that current arrangements are compatible with the Inquiry's findings.

Secondary Schools

17. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next plans to meet the National Assembly Education Secretary to discuss secondary school provision. [136879]

Mr. Hanson: Both the Secretary of State and I will be meeting the National Assembly Secretary for Education, Jane Davidson, in the near future, and I plan to meet her on a regular basis to discuss education issues that are important to Wales.

Pensioners

18. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received from pensioner organisations in Wales. [136880]

Mr. Hanson: In recent months I have received a number of representations from pensioner organisations. I have also met with some pensioner groups.

21. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with Department of Social Security Ministers about (a) the take up of the Minimum Income Guarantee for pensioners, (b) the issuing of free television licences and (c) winter fuel payments in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [136883]

Mr. Hanson: I speak regularly with colleagues in Whitehall and we discuss a range of issues. My officials are also in close contact with their counterparts in the Department of Social Security on matters that affect pensioners in Wales.

The uprated Minimum Income Guarantee will help 105,000 pensioner households in Wales. 10,000 more pensioners in Wales will be eligible and benefits will increase for the 95,000 pensioners currently eligible. Over 200,000 over 75 pension households will benefit from free television licences and the increased Winter Fuel Allowance will benefit 500,000 pensioner households in Wales.

I am sure that my hon. Friend will join me in welcoming the new measures announced for pensioners by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement.

27. Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next plans to meet representatives of pensioner organisations in Wales. [136889]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend and I regularly meet representatives of pensioner organisations and I met a group of pensioners on 9 November to discuss a range of issues with them.

My right hon. Friend has agreed to meet the National Association of Welsh Pensioners shortly to discuss the new measures announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 8 November.

Public Opinion (Young People)

19. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the operation of the mechanisms in Wales for Government to ascertain the opinions of young people; and if he will make a statement. [136881]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend and I welcome the way in which the Assembly is taking forward a cross-cutting agenda for support for young people in Wales. They are undertaking extensive consultation with young people and those who work with them in the statutory and voluntary sectors, to develop a Welsh strategy for the young people of Wales.

NHS

20. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary of the National Assembly on the NHS in Wales. [136882]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I regularly meet the Assembly First Secretary and the Health Secretary to discuss Health issues in Wales.

In addition we are all members of the Joint Ministerial Committee for health. To date, we have met four times and the opportunities to share ideas are proving very useful.

Fuel Duty

22. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the impact of fuel duty on the Welsh economy. [136884]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has announced a 2p reduction in duty on Ultra-Low Sulphur Fuel, petrol and diesel, on top of the 1p cut in the 2000 Budget. The Government are sympathetic to the needs of the whole UK economy. However, we also have a duty to environmental protection, and fuel duty and the Climate Change Levy have their part to play.

29. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the impact of vehicle fuel duties on the rural economy in Wales. [136891]

Mr. Paul Murphy: In this year's Budget, the Government gave a commitment to ending the fuel duty escalator and that there would be no increase in fuel duty, beyond the automatic increase in line with inflation. Fuel duty revenues go straight into a ring-fenced fund for improving public transport and modernising the road network. Wales is allocated a percentage of such moneys on the basis of the funding rules, but it is for the National Assembly to determine how the money is spent.

Manufacturing Industry

23. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent talks he has had with the First Secretary, concerning the prospects for manufacturing industry with particular reference to the steel industry; and if he will make a statement. [136885]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet regularly with my right hon. Friend the First Minister and discuss a number of issues, including the steel industry. The Government fully understand the importance of a successful manufacturing sector, and steel is making a vital contribution to the economy and employment.

Manufacturing output in Wales in the four quarters to the second quarter of 2000 was 4.2 per cent. higher than in the corresponding period of 1999 and 7 per cent. higher than in 1995.

Renewable Energy

24. Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry regarding the development of renewable energy in Wales. [136886]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have regular discussions with my Cabinet colleagues on a range of issues. Both the UK Government and the National Assembly for Wales support the development of renewable energy as a sustainable energy source for the future.

Children's Commissioner

25. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the First Minister of the National Assembly for Wales on the Government's legislative programme in respect of the Children's Commissioner for Wales. [136887]

Mr. Hanson: Since February this year, following the publication of the North Wales Child Abuse report, the First Minister and I have been in touch constantly about the legislation required to implement the post of Children's Commissioner.

Hospital Waiting Times

26. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary and the Welsh Health Secretary on the number of people waiting over 18 months for an operation. [136888]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I regularly meet the Assembly First Secretary and the Health Secretary to discuss health issues in Wales.

Moreover, we have all attended meetings of the Joint Ministerial Committee on health at which waiting lists and times have been discussed.

On 23 November, the National Assembly will launch the report of the Waiting Times Strategy Group. This will identify a wide range of recommendations to assist in reducing waiting lists/times.

Ambulance Services

28. Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representatives he has received concerning the inclusion of the ambulance service in Wales within a UK wide inspection system for ambulance services. [136890]

Mr. Hanson: None.

Rural Economy

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what impact the increases on fuel duty and Vehicle Excise Duty have had on the economy of rural Wales [136878]

Mr. Paul Murphy: In this year's Budget, the Government gave a commitment to ending the fuel duty escalator and that there would be no increase in fuel duty, beyond the automatic increase in line with inflation. Fuel duty revenues go straight into a ring-fenced fund for improving public transport and modernising the road network. Wales is allocated a percentage of such moneys on the basis of the spending rules, but it is for the National Assembly to determine whether the money is spent on transport or on other priorities. Our Budget plans for next year promise an abolition of vehicle excise duty (VED) on agricultural machines which will benefit owners of up to 15,000 such machines in Wales, currently paying £40.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Royal Institute of International Affairs

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the degree of access to confidential Government (a) documents and (b) briefings afforded to senior members and staff of the Royal Institute of International Affairs. [136246]

Mr. Robin Cook: I have been asked to reply.

All confidential Government documents and briefings are managed under established procedures, which apply without exemption.

We have regular exchanges with the Royal Institute of International Affairs (RIIA) and other similar organisations on many aspects of foreign policy, both privately and publicly.

Ministers and officials participate in RIIA hosted meetings. According to Chatham House, meetings of the Institute may be held "on the record" or under the Chatham House Rule. When a meeting, or part thereof, is held under the Chatham House Rule, participants are free to use information received, but neither the identity nor the affiliation of the speakers, nor that of any other participant, may be revealed; nor may it be mentioned that the information was received at a meeting of the Institute.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken in the past three months to install more safe cells for remand prisoners. [137714]

Mr. Boateng: The Prison Service has developed a safer cell design, which provides protection for those at risk of self-harm. Since 1996, a total of 185 cells have been installed to this "improved cell" standard. 1,088 cells in the new prisons at Forest Bank and Ashfield—Design, Construction, Management and Finance (DCMF) prisons—reflect aspects of the new design requirements.

A strategy to introduce safer cell design features will be developed as part of a revised suicide prevention policy. There have been no improved cells installed since the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche), referred in an Adjournment debate to plans to include them in new houseblocks and prisons, 7 July 2000, Official Report, column 603. But the Prison Service has confirmed its intention to incorporate the safer cell designed features into some or all of the cells in new houseblocks being built in establishments. Two new DCMF prisons under construction at Dovegate and Rye Hill will provide 1,353 cells reflecting aspects of the new design requirement.

Prisons

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff there are on night duty in each prison holding juveniles; and what the staff to prisoner ratio is in such prisons on night shifts. [137723]

Mr. Boateng: The table shows the night staffing figures for those establishments holding juveniles with the corresponding staff-to-prisoner ratio.

Establishment	Number of staff	Staff to prisoner ratio

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the jurisdiction of HM Inspectorate of Prisons, Probations and the Prisons Ombudsman extends to Guernsey, Jersey and the Isle of Man. [137799]

Mr. Boateng: The authority of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Probation and the Prisons Ombudsman covers England and Wales only. However, both the Prisons and Probation Inspectorates have on occasion carried out inspections at the request of the Islands' authorities.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the ethnic composition is of (a) staff and (b) prisoners in each prison which holds juvenile offenders. [137722]

Mr. Boateng: The answer is given in the tables.

Table 1: Ethnic composition of staff in juvenile establishments as at 31 October 2000

		Percentage of staff who have declared their ethnicity
Establishment	Total SIP	White	Asian	Black	Other ethnic groups

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mothers and babies were transported from one prison to another in (a) 1998 and (b) 1999. [137810]

Mr. Boateng: The figures for the number of mothers and their babies transported from one prison to another in 1998 and 1999 are set out in the table.

Prisons	1998	1999
Holloway	19	21
New Hall	4	6
Styal	7	7

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Prison Service Health Care Department will publish the 1997–98 annual report. [137805]

Mr. Boateng: The Prison Service Director of Health Care's Annual Report 1997–98 was published early in 1999. I am arranging for copies of the report to be placed in the Library.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners hanged themselves in 1999; [137801]

(2) what operational lessons have been learned, and what changes have been made, following the deaths in HMP Leicester in December 1999; and if he will make a statement; [137721]

(3) how many prisoners suffered permanent damage as a result of an attempted suicide in 1999; [137802]

(4) what was the elapsed time between estimated time of death and discovery of the body for each prisoner who committed suicide in 1998 and 1999. [137800]

Mr. Boateng: 86 of the 91 self-inflicted deaths in custody in 1999 were by hanging. There is no reliable information about attempted suicides as at present no distinction is made between forms of self-harm. Long term or permanent physical or psychological damage can result from a variety of forms of self-harm, including substance abuse.

There were 173 self-inflicted deaths in 1998 and 1999, and full information about the timing of these deaths in relation to the discovery of the bodies could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Of 40—the first 20 in both years—cases examined, 22 inquest reports contain no record of estimated time of death. Of the remainder, nine deaths are estimated to have occurred between eight minutes and six hours 25 minutes before discovery of the body and nine deaths between 15 minutes and 78 days afterwards.

There have been six self-inflicted deaths in Leicester prison in the last year, including two in December 1999. Internal inquiries are complete in respect of five of the six and have identified no failures of basic procedures or apparent links between the six deaths. Five Coroners' inquests are awaited. Since January 2000, the prison's care suite has been refurbished, is permanently manned and in regular use. Two crisis suites are being introduced. Leicester's good and active Listener scheme has been expanded. Improved accommodation will be provided for new receptions.

The continuing rise in prisoner suicides, particularly in local prisons like Leicester, has prompted a major review of the Prison Service's work on suicide prevention. There will be a focus on local prisons like Leicester because they have high proportions of unconvicted prisoners and large throughputs and disproportionate numbers of their populations at the most risk of suicide or self-harm.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women prisoners applied for a place in a mother and baby unit in (a) 1998 and (b) 1999 during the reception procedure. [137809]

Mr. Boateng: It is not the practice in any of the female prisons for a woman to make an application for a place on a mother and baby unit during the reception procedure. The Prison Service Order to Governors on the "Management of Mother and Baby Units and the Application Process" was published in February. This requires all women's prisons, as part of the reception process, to identify all eligible women and provide them with the prisoners' handbook "All About Mother and Baby Units" so that they can apply as soon as possible after the reception process. The order also required all women's prisons to appoint a named liaison officer, to be responsible for ensuring that all women, sentenced or unsentenced, who are pregnant or have a child under 18 months, are identified and informed of the arrangements for applying for a place on a mother and baby unit. All women's prisons now have a named liaison officer.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women have given birth while held in HMP Brockhill in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [137806]

Mr. Boateng: Brockhill prison we re-roled to a female prison in 1997. Since then, six women have given birth while held in the prison. Five of these were at the Alexandra Hospital, Redditch, and one this year within the prison.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement regarding the young woman who gave birth inside New Hall prison this summer. [137808]

Mr. Boateng: To date, three births have taken place within New Hall prison this year. These happened in July, August and October. However, in all three cases, staff were only alerted when labour was at a very advanced stage. Therefore, there was not enough time to transfer the women to hospital.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were committed to prison in (a) 1998 and (b) 1999 for each imprisonable offence. [137712]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is given in the table. This information is also published in successive volumes of "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (Tables 1.16, 3.8 and 4.5 of the 1999 edition Cm 4805) copies of which are in the Library.

Fuel Theft

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to reduce the number of thefts of fuel from service station forecourts. [137629]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Both my Department and the Association of Chief Police Officers are represented on the British Oil Industry Security Syndicate. We support initiatives the Syndicate has developed to combat service station forecourt crimes, including the theft of petrol. The Syndicate aims to share information among its members and work with other partners to encourage the spread of best practice.

One such initiative is the establishment of 'Forecourt Watch' schemes in several areas of the country. These schemes, operated in conjunction with the local police, provide service stations with an early warning system of vehicles and individuals involved with crime on forecourts. When a crime is committed local petrol retailers immediately report the incident to the local police, who transmit warnings via a communications system such as 'Ringmaster'. A number of other schemes are currently being developed.

Number Plates

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will amend the legislation relating to the issue of registration plates for vehicles in order to reduce the incidence of crime involving the misuse of number plates. [137628]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The possibility of amending the legislation relating to the supply and issue of registration plates for vehicles was discussed in the Vehicle Crime Reduction Action Team's five-year strategy 'Tackling Vehicle Crime', published in September 1999. We are looking closely at the proposal to legislate in this area.

Voting

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what pilot projects have been introduced since May 1997 on alternative methods of voting at elections in the United Kingdom. [137948]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Representation of the People Act 2000 enabled local authorities to pilot alternative methods of voting for the first time. A total of 38 pilot schemes were carried out at last May's local elections. Of these, there were 15 early voting schemes, seven all-postal ballots, five electronic voting and/or counting schemes, four which offered postal votes on demand, three schemes involving mobile polling, two schemes involving extending polling hours, one weekend voting scheme and one scheme which offered candidates free delivery of election material.

Police (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many civilian police personnel were based in Gloucestershire on 1 January (a) 2000, (b) 1999, (c) 1998, (d) 1997, (e) 1996 and (f) 1992; [137946]

(2) how many uniformed police personnel were based in Gloucestershire on 1 January (a) 2000, (b) 1999, (c) 1998, (d) 1997, (e) 1996 and (f) 1992. [137945]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Since April 1995, police numbers have been collected twice a year, in March and September. The information in the table is therefore for 31 March of each year requested.

Gloucestershire Constabulary

Year[1]	Number of police officers	Number of civilian support staff
2000	1,114	484
1999	1,104	504
1998	1,104	423
1997	1,133	435
1996	1,333	415
1992	1,174	367

[1] As at 31 March in each year

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers began basic training in Gloucestershire in (a) 1992, (b) 1996, (c) 1997, (d) 1998 and (e) 1999; and how many he estimates will do so in 2000. [137947]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Chief Constable of Gloucestershire Constabulary informs me that in 1992 the number of police officers who commenced basic training was 16.

Since 1994, in accordance with the requirements of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary, figures have been compiled on the basis of financial (not calendar) years:

Year	Number
1995–96	28
1996–97	60
1997–98	28
1998–99	61
1999–2000	59

The number of recruits commencing basic training in 2000–01 up to the end of December is expected to be 53.

Proof-of-age Cards

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy on proof-of-age cards. [137938]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We support schemes which issue credible proof-of-age cards, believing that they have an important part to play in strategies to control the sale of age-restricted goods to young people.

Drugs (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in Gloucestershire were (a) arrested and (b) convicted for drug related incidents in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [137937]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information is not collated centrally on drug-related incidents or offences, neither are data collected centrally on arrests for drug offences. However, information is published annually in the Home Office Bulletin on Drug Seizure and Offender Statistics, United Kingdom, on the number of persons found guilty of, or cautioned for, drug offences. Information for the period 1990 to 1999 is given in the table.

Number of people found guilty of, or cautioned for, drug offences, Gloucestershire, 1990–99

Probation Services

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the overall spending on probation services was for each county in England and Wales in the last 12 months; and what was the average cost of maintaining a person on probation in the last 12 months. [137720]

Mr. Boateng: The financial year 1998–99 is the latest year for which the Home Office has details of audited revenue expenditure by Probation Services.

Probation Services' revenue expenditure in England and Wales for the financial year 1998–99 is shown in the table.

Probation Order	1,710
Community Service Order	1,400
Supervision under Children's and Young Persons Act 1969	1,460

Elderly Prisoners

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female prisoners are (i) over the retirement age and (ii) over 80-years-old. [138170]

Mr. Boateng: Provisional information for 30 September 2000 shows that there were 578 persons (568 male and 10 females) aged 65 years or over in prisons in England and Wales. This includes both remand and sentenced prisoners. Of these, 12 (all of which were male) were aged over 80 years.

Constituency Boundaries

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes to parliamentary constituency boundaries are due to take place before (a) March 2001 and (b) May 2002. [138023]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None. The Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England is required to report on its review of parliamentary boundaries between April 2003 and April 2007. The Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales is required to report on its review of parliamentary boundaries between December 2002 and December 2006. Any changes recommended as a result of those reviews would not take effect until the following general election. There will be no changes before then.

Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish an inter-departmental committee to consider the workings of section 24 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement. [138185]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government have a clear commitment to Freedom of Information. I am well aware of the need for increased openness and am equally aware of the concerns within the scientific community about security and commercial sensitivity.

I have recently held a seminar comprising representatives of animal protection groups and the scientific community to discuss Freedom of Information issues and officials are currently in the process of holding a series of separate meetings with those organisations. In due course, I will be reconvening the group to discuss progress made.

Private Sector Prisons

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each prison which is managed by the private sector, the number of (a) prisoners and (b) full-time and part-time equivalent staff at the most recent date for which figures are available, indicating the total annual saving to public funds resulting from the use of private sector operated prisons. [138196]

Mr. Boateng: The number of prisoners and full-time and full-time equivalent staff at private sector prisons is shown in the table.

Prison	Prisoners at 13 November 2000	Staff
Wolds	398	262
Blakenhurst	836	315
Doncaster	1,050	618
Parc	841	350.5
Altcourse	795	526
Lowdham Grange	513	254.3
Ashfield	366	253
Forest Bank	706	339.5

The comparative costs of the non-Public Finance Initiative (PFI) private sector prisons (Wolds, Blakenhurst and Doncaster) and their closest public sector counterparts have been reviewed annually. In the most recent report for 1998–99, private sector prisons offered on average a saving of 13 per cent. in terms of cost per prisoner but little or no saving when cost per baseline and in-use places were compared.The contractual Net Present Value (NPV) of the PFI prisons assessed against their public sector comparator (PSC) is shown in the table.

Prison	NPV (£ million)	PSC (£ million)	Saving (per cent.)
Parc	266	319	17
Altcourse	247	248	less than 1
Lowdham Grange	127	157	19
Ashfield	122	141	14
Forest Bank	204.5	234.5	13
Rye Hill	154	209	26
Dovegate	241	292	18

Work is under way with a view to establishing a methodology for comparing the costs of PFI prisons with comparable public sector counterparts.

Cannabis

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 25 October 2000, Official Report, column 430W, how many of those convicted in England and Wales in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998 for possession of cannabis have been convicted again since then. [137999]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Data are available on a sample of 1,324 offenders convicted of possession of cannabis in 1998. The following table shows whether these offenders have been reconvicted of any recordable offence at any time. For those offenders originally convicted in the first half of 1998, the table also presents whether they have been reconvicted of any recordable offence within two years of the original offence. A distinction is made between offences where possession of cannabis was the principal original offence, and where it was a secondary offence.

Reconviction of sampled offenders convicted of possession of cannabis in 1998

Measure—whether cannabis possession was original principal offence	Percentage reconvicted[1]
Ever reconvicted
Principal offence	49.3 (819)
Non-principal offence	56.6 (505)
All offences	53.0 (1,324)
Reconvicted within two years
Principal offence	47.5 (402)
Non-principal offence	51.2 (244)
All offences	48.9 (646)

[1] Total number in sample

Reconvictions are counted only for offences committed after the original conviction. No comparable figures are available for 1997.

Schengen Information System

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if UK nationals have been placed on the Schengen Information System by non-UK Government authorities. [137895]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Clarke), on 31 October 2000, Official Report, column 428W. The United Kingdom does not yet have access to data entered on to the Schengen Information System by Schengen partner countries.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans (a) to put data on the Schengen Information System and (b) to obtain access to its data. [137893]

Mrs. Roche: The Government are considering, in consultation with law enforcement agencies and other interested parties in the United Kingdom and Schengen partner countries, the arrangements for putting data onto the Schengen Information System (SIS) and having access to SIS data. I am not yet in a position to say when the arrangements will be in place.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the United Kingdom will not make any inquiries of the Schengen Information System during its first year of membership. [137892]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Clarke), on 31 October 2000, Official Report, column 427W. The United Kingdom is not in a position to make inquiries of the Schengen Information System because the necessary arrangements for sharing data with Schengen partner countries through the system are not yet in place.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average custodial sentence imposed in each of the last three years on persons convicted of repeat offences of domestic violence; [137878]

(2) how many individuals convicted of a second offence of domestic violence were imprisoned in each of the last three years. [137880]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not available. Offence classifications used by the Home Office are based upon legal definitions. From the data held centrally it is not possible to identify the relationship between the victim and the offender convicted of committing a crime.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of sentencing policy towards persons convicted of offences of domestic violence. [137879]

Mr. Boateng: Statistics held centrally do not distinguish the relationship between an offender and the victim of the crime. It is therefore not possible to tell from those data what sentences offenders who commit domestic violence offences receive or what effect those sentences have. Projects under the Crime Reduction Programme's violence against women initiative, and earlier research, looks at different aspects of domestic violence, including criminal remedies. This work focuses on effective interventions rather than individual sentences. Relevant information is on the Home Office's domestic violence website: www.homeoffice.gov.uk/domesticviolence/index.htm. The probation service Pathfinder initiative is currently looking at perpetrator programmes run by the service for those put under its supervision, to see what works for wider adoption.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to issue guidelines to the courts on the sentencing of persons convicted of offences of domestic violence. [137876]

Mr. Boateng: The Government have no power to issue sentencing guidelines.

Powers in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 empower the Home Secretary to direct the Sentencing Advisory Panel to propose to the Court of Appeal that it issue guidelines for specific offences or categories of offence. However, the term "domestic violence" can include a range of behaviour, which could amount to one of a number of criminal offences: it is not confined to one particular offence. It is difficult to see how the Court of Appeal could issue guidelines relating specifically to domestic violence.

Drugs

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with his Dutch counterpart about the policy of the Government of the Netherlands towards drugs. [137887]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 31 October 2000, Official Report, column 431W. I have had no recent separate bi-lateral discussions with my Dutch counterpart.

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 610W, on the home detention curfew scheme, if he will list the sentences imposed on those prisoners released under the home detention curfew scheme who have since been convicted of a further offence. [137967]

Mr. Boateng: Information about sentences imposed upon prisoners placed on the home detention curfew scheme who have since been convicted of a further offence is not held centrally.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people who have been released from prison under the home detention curfew scheme have committed two or more offences since their release; and what sentences they have received. [137884]

Mr. Boateng: As of 30 September 2000, the Prison Service was notified of 242 prisoners who had been convicted, cautioned or were awaiting prosecution for two or more offences committed while they were subject to the home detention curfew scheme. Information on the sentences imposed upon those prisoners who have been convicted is not held centrally.

Gay Relationships

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 31 October 2000, Official Report, column 425W, how many representations he has received (a) supporting and (b) opposing the civil registration of homosexual and lesbian relationships. [137997]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since May 1997, we have received 37 representations supporting, and 10 representations opposing civil registration. These were predominantly from individual members of the public rather than from campaigning organisations.

Sex Videos (Juvenile Protection)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 590W, when he will publish his conclusions regarding measures to protect children from exposure to sexually explicit material contained in videos with an R18 classification. [137991]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I will publish my conclusions as soon as I have had an opportunity to consider the responses to the consultation paper.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many responses he received to the consultation paper published on 24 July regarding the protection of children from exposure to sexually explicit material. [137890]

Mr. Charles Clarke: To date, 107 responses have been received to the Consultation Paper on the Regulation of R18 videos. The consultation period formally ended on 31 October although several individuals and organisations have sought permission to send responses after this date.

Football Hooligans

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people arrested at Premiership and Nationwide league grounds during the (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1997–98 seasons were (i) convicted of an offence and (ii) given a custodial sentence. [137889]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is not available. Most types of offences committed in connection with football are not specific to football; because convictions are recorded by category of offence rather than by the location or circumstances of the offence, no separate record is kept as to which offences took place at football grounds.

Child Abuse

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will commission a statistical study of the link between domestic violence and child abuse. [137883]

Mr. Boateng: The Government are well aware of the links between domestic violence and child abuse. These have already been documented by a number of research studies. A useful guide is contained in "Making an Impact: children and domestic violence: a training and resource pack". This document prepared by the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (NSPCC), Barnardo's and the University of Bristol was published by the University of Bristol in 1998. The Government's own publication "Working Together to Safeguard Children"—a guide to inter-agency working to safeguard and promote the welfare of children, makes clear that everyone working with women and children should be alert to the frequent inter-relationship between domestic violence and the abuse and neglect of children. It also notes that domestic violence in itself is likely to have a damaging effect on children's health and development.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many instances of child abuse were reported in each police force area in each of the last three years. [137882]

Mr. Charles Clarke: It is not known how many instances of child abuse were reported to the police in the last three years.

Offences recorded by the police are not collected by age of victim nationally. The number of offences recorded by the police, which can be identified as committed against children, is given in the table, by police force areas for the years 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000. Data for cruelty to or neglect of children were not collected separately prior to April 1998.

Number of offences against children by offence and police force area for the financial years 1998–99 and 1999–2000

Corpus Juris

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those proposals, originally set out in Corpus Juris, which are under discussion at EU level (a) separately and (b) conjointly; and what his policy is regarding the exercise of the UK's veto in each case. [137896]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, my hon. and noble Friend Lord Bassam of Brighton, in another place on 25 October 2000, Official Report, House of Lords, column 45WA.

The Corpus Juris proposals as a whole have not been discussed in any meeting of the Council of the European Union (EU). A proposal by the Commission concerning the creation of a European Public Prosecutor has been discussed briefly in the Inter-governmental Conference (IGC) but the United Kingdom, as well as the majority of other EU member states, opposed its inclusion in the Treaty of Nice.

Sex Offenders

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 31 October 2000, Official Report, column 435W, how many responses he has so far received to the consultation paper 'Setting the Boundaries: reforming the law on sex offenders'. [137996]

Mr. Charles Clarke: To date, the Government have received 170 responses from a wide range of people and organisations. The closing date for comments is March 2001.

Credit Card Fraud

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the level of credit card fraud over the last three years; and what plans he has to reduce its incidence. [137886]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Recorded crime figures for credit card fraud and cheque fraud are not separately identified. The total figures for England and Wales in the years ending March 1999 and March 2000 were 141,948 and 173,857 respectively.

The Association for Payment and Clearing Services (APACS) estimates that the value of credit card fraud relating to cards issued within the United Kingdom for the years ending March 1999 and March 2000 at £135 million and £189.4 million respectively.

The Government take the problem of card fraud very seriously and we liaise closely with the Association for Payment and Clearing Services and others to establish and promote best practice in protecting cards.

The Home Office held a seminar at the end of June to seek views from the banks, retailers and others about how the increasing levels of credit card fraud in the United Kingdom could be addressed. The main issues are the introduction of chip cards which would significantly reduce the use of fraudulent cards, and the introduction of a cardholder verification system, probably using a Personal Identification Number (PIN) number, to confirm that the user of the card is genuine. We want to see these important measures introduced as soon as possible. We are working in partnership with the industry to examine other ways in which the response to credit card fraud can be improved. A further seminar to take stock of the outcome of these discussions will take place later this month.

Carriers (Illegal Immigrants)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy toward the European Council Initiative on the adoption of a directive on the harmonisation of financial penalties imposed on carriers for carriage of third country nationals lacking necessary documents. [138087]

Mrs. Roche: The adoption of penalties on those who transport inadequately documented third-country nationals into member states is one of a number of initiatives agreed by the European Council to tackle the problem of illegal immigration across Europe. It forms an important part of the European Union strategy for tackling this serious problem. We are fully committed to co-operating with other member states on the issue. The United Kingdom has opted in to this initiative. Doing so is consistent with our policy of participating in immigration measures which do not conflict with our position on frontiers.

The United Kingdom already has legislation in place whereby a financial charge may be imposed on carriers transporting inadequately documented passengers. The United Kingdom Government have some reservations about the terms of the draft directive implementing this initiative. We are currently seeking changes to the draft through negotiation.

Police Procedures

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 520W, when the review of the Codes of Practice which govern police procedures under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 will be completed and its findings published. [137990]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The current intention is to publish initial draft revised Codes of Practice for consultation by the end of this year and to lay final drafts before Parliament by the end of March 2001. The revised Codes should be in force by 1 July 2001.

National Confiscation Agency

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is in respect of the creation of a National Confiscation Agency. [137935]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead (Mr. Cohen) on 28 July 2000, Official Report, column 1158W.

Licensed Sex Shops

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the proposal by the president of the British Board of Film Classification for an increase in the number of licensed sex shops in British cities. [137934]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982 provides a means of control of sex shop premises. It is for local authorities to decide whether or not to issue a 'sex shop' licence and there are no plans to relax these controls.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Security Commissioners Decision

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he proposes to take following the recent decision (reference number: C.DLA/714/1998) of a tribunal of Social Security Commissioners in relation to the lower rate mobility component of Disability Living Allowance; and if he will make a statement. [138882]

Mr. Bayley: The decision, which we generally welcome, should help to achieve more consistency in decision making on entitlement to the lower rate mobility component. However, a part of the decision, which relates to a disabled person's fear or anxiety while out of doors, goes beyond what Parliament intended. That part of the decision proceeds on the assumption that a person may, for the purpose of entitlement to disability benefit, be considered to be incapable of doing something even though he is physically and mentally capable of doing it, but chooses not to do so.

We are, therefore, considering scope for the introduction of amending regulations which would, subject to parliamentary approval, restore and clarify the original policy intention. However, it would not be our intention that any amendment would affect the legitimate conditions of entitlement to the lower rate mobility component, which would allow those people disabled by serious mental conditions, such as agoraphobia, to remain potentially eligible for benefit.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his Department will publish the study of Minimum Income Guarantee take-up. [136943]

Mr. Rooker: The Minimum Income Guarantee take-up campaign is still in progress.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications resulted from his Department's most recent take-up campaign for the Minimum Income Guarantee for pensioners; how many were successful; and what were the principal reasons for failure. [137267]

Mr. Rooker: The current Minimum Income Guarantee take-up campaign is still in progress. So far, we have had over 600,000 responses, and around half of those claims already processed have been successful.

Departmental Employees (New Deal)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff are employed by his Department under the New Deal for Young People. [137962]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer from my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 551W.

Housing Benefit

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the review of Housing Benefit claims from people living in supported and sheltered housing to be completed; and if he will list those local authorities that have not yet submitted information on this matter. [137706]

Angela Eagle: Research information from local authorities suggests that the majority will have completed the review of claims from people living in supported accommodation by the end of this calendar year. However, because the information was collected through research we are unable to supply the names of individual authorities which have not, as yet, reviewed their cases. We are collecting management information on other aspects of the scheme and this will be published in the usual way.

Duplicate Benefit Payments

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 31 October 2000, Official Report, column 347W, how much of the £10.5 million lost in duplicate payments of Income Support on 17 and 18 January has been recovered to date. [138342]

Mr. Rooker: The administration of benefits is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Frank Field, dated 14 November 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how much of the £10.5 million lost in duplicate payments of Income Support on 17th and 18th January has been received to date.

To date, £7.6m has been recovered.

I hope this is helpful.

Disability Living Allowance (Appeals)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what maximum time is permitted for the chairman of a Disability Living Allowance appeal tribunal to produce a full written decision of the tribunal chairman's findings. [138035]

Angela Eagle: This is a matter for the President of the Appeals Service.

There is no statutory time limit by which a chairman of a Disability Living Allowance appeal tribunal should produce a full written statement. However, the President is keen to ensure that the public has a clear understanding of the level of performance they can expect. That is why he has set a standard of 10 days for the tribunal Chair to produce a full statement of reasons. This is in addition to standards set by the Appeals Service agency of two days to refer the statement to the Chairman, and three days to type and issue the statement to the appellant. This results in an overall standard of fifteen days.

We recognise that anecdotal evidence has shown that these standards are not always met. And unfortunately, the management information systems (MIS) in place do not yet give robust information to enable us to establish the proportion of cases in which these standards are being met. MIS are currently being put in place to enable these standards to be monitored.

Children's Tax Credit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families will be subject to a marginal rate of income tax of more than 40 per cent. during the period that the Children's Tax Credit is withdrawn from them. [138307]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

The highest rate of income tax is 40 per cent.

National Insurance Fund

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the additional income would be of the National Insurance Fund in 2000–01 and 2001–02 if (a) the reductions in employers' contributions in 1997 and subsequent years to compensate for the (i) landfill tax, (ii) climate change levy and (iii) aggregates levy, were cancelled and (b) the Treasury supplement were reintroduced at the rate specified in section 1(5) of the Social Security Act 1975. [136049]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

For part (a) of the question, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 17 April 2000, Official Report, column 375W.

For part (b) of the question, section 1(5) of the Social Security Act 1975 specified a supplement of 18 per cent. of the gross contribution income.

CABINET OFFICE

Sniffing Tunnels

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to her letter of 31 August, what contact has taken place with Ion Track Instruments on drug and explosive sniffing tunnels; and what has been done to monitor the progress of the development and evaluation of these devices. [136807]

Marjorie Mowlam: Officials in HM Customs and Excise have maintained contact with Ion Tack Instruments, but there have been no significant developments with this portal detection system since my hon. Friend received the letter of 31 August from the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney). I understand that further tests in the United States will take place early in the new year, in which UK Government officials will maintain an interest in the progress and outcomes.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the non-departmental public bodies responsible to her which have duties relating to Scotland, indicating their budget and staffing in Scotland, the number of Scottish board members and their emoluments. [137627]

Mr. Stringer: The following non-departmental public bodies, sponsored by my Department, have a GB or UK-wide remit:

Advisory Committee on Business Appointments
Advisory Committee on Advertising
Agriculture and Environment Biotechnology Commission
Better Regulation Task Force
Civil Service Appeal Board
Committee on Standards in Public Life
House of Lords Appointments Commission
Political Honours Scrutiny Committee
Security Commission
Security Vetting Appeals Panel
Senior Salaries Review Body
Sustainable Development Commission
Women's National Commission.

The remaining information is not held centrally in the form requested; but general information on expenditure, staffing board members and levels of remuneration is published annually in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies". Copies of "Public Bodies 1999" have been placed in the Libraries of the House; and "Public Bodies 2000" is due to be published next month. Information on board membership and remuneration is also available from the Cabinet Office Public Appointments Directory website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk).

Relocation

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office which relocation companies hold contracts with her Office for the relocation of civil servants; when the contracts were last renewed; where the contracts were advertised; and what the length and value of each contract is. [137195]

Mr. Stringer: There are no relocation companies who hold contracts with the Cabinet Office, COI or the Government Car and Despatch Agency for the relocation of civil servants.

PRIME MINISTER

Lord Falconer

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what factors he took into account in appointing Lord Falconer to each of the Cabinet committees of which he is a member. [137546]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 November 2000]: As under successive Administrations, appointments to Cabinet Committees are entirely a matter for the Prime Minister.

TREASURY

IR35

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total cost to public funds arising from the implementation of IR35 and the handling of queries and appeals from businesses affected by it. [138442]

Dawn Primarolo: So far, the main additional activity undertaken by the Inland Revenue associated with the introduction of the 'IR35' legislation has been the provision of advice to taxpayers and their advisers. This service has been provided by existing staff as part of their normal duties.

Contingency Reserve

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received requesting the contingency reserve to be used to defray additional costs incurred as a result of recent extreme weather conditions. [138214]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Reserve is meeting the costs of the additional £51 million recently set aside by the Government for flood defence activity in England on top of the resources allocated to flood defence in the 2000 Spending Review. Devolved Administrations will also receive increases, calculated according to the Barnett formula. These are likewise being met from the Reserve.

Money Laundering

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 2 November 2000, Official

Report, column 613W, on money laundering, which identification measures for clients involved in distance transactions it is his policy to introduce. [138033]

Miss Melanie Johnson: All persons and institutions subject to the Money Laundering Regulations 1993 must identify their customer at the start of an ongoing business relationship, when carrying out a one-off transaction of more than 15,000 euro, or where there is a suspicion that a transaction is related to money laundering. These obligations apply for face to face and distance transactions.

Pensioners (Taxation)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost of (a)(i) an untapered and (ii) a tapered age-related allowance of £15,000 a year for pensioners of over 75 years and (b) excluding all pensioners of over 80-years-old from income tax. [136274]

Dawn Primarolo: The estimated full year costs for 2001–02 are in the table.

	Costs (£ million)
Increase the 75+ personal allowance to £15,000 and not tapering	1,400
Increase the 75+ personal allowance to £15,000 and tapering from the aged income limit	1,100
Excluding people aged 80 and over from income tax	1,100

These estimates are based on the Survey of Personal Incomes and are consistent with the November 2000 Pre-Budget Report.

WFTC (Tooting)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people living in the Tooting constituency receive working families tax credit. [13[illegible]6]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Chaytor) on 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 515W.

G-CAT

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what work has been undertaken for his Department in the last three years by G-CAT. [136198]

Mr. Andrew Smith: For the three financial years ending in March 2000, the Treasury has placed orders for PC servers and other related computer equipment with G-CAT.

Trader Registration

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what investigations the Inland Revenue has undertaken this year to check whether individual traders utilising internet auction sites are wrongfully failing to register as businesses; [136158]

(2) in how many cases this year the Inland Revenue has successfully detected traders wrongfully failing to register as businesses; and how much unpaid tax has been recovered; [136157]

(3) in how many cases this year the Inland Revenue has requested access to the electronic records held by the operators of internet auction sites to check whether individual traders are wrongfully failing to register as businesses. [136156]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue can formally ask for information that would identify vendors on internet auction sites, although they would not normally be entitled to see the electronic records for that purpose. Requests for information like this form part of the intelligence gathering process carried out in local offices. Local officers have discretion on how to use their powers, subject to central guidance, and it is not possible to quantify the number of cases where formal requests for information have been from internet auction sites. it is not possible to say how many traders were identified.

Elan

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) reports, (b) research and (c) projects have been undertaken for his Department in the last three years by Elan. [134460]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Elan Computing provided IT support to the Office of Government Commerce during the 2000–2001 Financial year. We have no record of any other dealings with a company of that name.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 16 November 2000

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Accommodation Questionnaire

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what the cost was of issuing the questionnaire to hon. Members on the type of accommodation they preferred; how many hon. Members replied to the questionnaire; and what action has been taken to accommodate the requests contained in the replies. [138543]

Sir Sydney Chapman: Other than the cost of the stationery, there was no cost in issuing the questionnaire. 556 hon. Members responded. The results of the survey were analysed, presented to the Committee and passed to the Accommodation Whips.

PRIME MINISTER

Committee on Standards in Public Life

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to receive the seventh Report of the Committee on Standards in Public Life; and if he will make a statement. [138994]

The Prime Minister: I am pleased to announce that the seventh Report of the Committee on Standards in Public Life, entitled "Standards of Conduct in the House of Lords", has been published today by the Committee. Copies are available in the Vote Office and the Libraries.

The recommendations in the Report are for the House of Lords. The Government welcome the Report and hope and expect that the House of Lords will give it the serious consideration that it deserves.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Post Office

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what the value is of the social network payment anticipated in the Post Office Network Business Plan for each year to 2005–06; [138042]

(2) how much of the £80 million per annum payment towards the Post Office Network's fixed costs from the Government Practitioner Services and Internet learning access points anticipated in 2005–06 in the Post Office Network Business Plan will be offset by savings in other Government Departments currently offering similar services; [138037]

(3) what proportion of the extra revenues anticipated as a result of the Post Office's Business Plan for the Post Office Network are assumed to come from Government agencies. [138041]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 13 November 2000]: It is established practice under section II paragraph 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose such information.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library a list of the sub-post offices which have closed since May 1997. [136704]

Mr. Byers: I understand from the Post Office that a full list of sub-post office closures since May 1997 is not readily available in one central location.

Ultra-low Sulphur Fuel

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of filling stations which (a) supply ultra-low sulphur petrol and (b) will supply ultra-low sulphur petrol by April 2001. [138440]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 15 November 2000]: The Department does not hold information on the number of petrol retail outlets in the UK selling ultra-low sulphur petrol (ULSP). According to HM Customs and Excise data, ULSP currently constitutes around a third of petrol released for consumption in the UK.

Future levels of supply for ULSP will be a matter for individual companies to determine.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many fuel retail outlets sell low sulphur petrol in (a) Wales, (b) rural Wales, (c) England and (d) rural England; and what proportion this is of total petrol outlets. [138268]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Altrincham and Sale, West (Mr. Brady) .

Information Technology

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) which Departments had not produced e-business strategies by the end of October; [138640]

(2) in which disadvantaged communities the Government plan to pilot the costs and benefits of universal broadband access; [138637]

(3) which Government Departments have introduced low cost personal computer leasing schemes for public service employees; and how many public service employees have benefited from these schemes; [138638]

(4) which Government Departments and agencies are not connected to the Government secure internet; [138636]

(7) when he will publish his plans to liberalise re-use of Government information by internet content providers. [138741]

Ms Hewitt: I would like to thank my hon. Friend for the interest he has shown in key elements of the Government's strategy for the information age. I have been asked to reply as the Minister with overarching responsibility for that strategy, which the e-Envoy and I published in the UK Online Annual Report on 11 September.

Yesterday, we published our plan for implementing all the commitments to action in the UK online report. This is on the internet at www.e-envoy.gov.uk/2000/progress/montprog.htm. The e-Envoy and I report monthly to the Prime Minister on progress against these targets. These progress reports are accessible on the internet at www.e-envoy.gov.uk/2000/progress/progress.htm.

On the specific questions my hon. Friend asks, the position is as follows:

Universal broadband access

The Wired Up Communities initiative will be piloting the impact that providing access to the internet might have on disadvantaged communities. On 11 October the Minister responsible for Learning and Technology, the Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment, my hon. Friend the Member for North Swindon (Mr. Wills), announced that the first wired up community will be Kensington, Liverpool. We expect to announce further pilot areas in the new year.

Electronic Government procurement

Departments will monitor their own progress towards the target that > by 2001 90 per cent. of low value goods (by volume) will be purchased electronically.

A tool to enable them to measure their progress has been developed and extensively trialled by the Office of Government Commerce. The measurement tool will be distributed to Principal Finance Officers shortly.

Liberalising re-use of Government information

I announced on 6 September our plans to boost the Knowledge Economy by overhauling the way Government information can be acquired and reused by publishing and internet businesses. This announcement was in the context of the Government's Review of the Knowledge Driven Economy as part of the Spending Review 2000. Her Majesty's Stationery Office colleagues are in the process of finalising details of key reforms with Treasury colleagues and are planning to publish these in late November.

Personal computer leasing schemes

We are committed to encouraging low cost leasing schemes in the Public Sector, and are currently auditing existing schemes. Over 27,000 teachers have purchased low cost computers through DfEEs 'Computers for Teachers' programme.

Publication of UK online monthly progress reports

The last monthly progress report to the Prime Minister was submitted on 15 November and published on the e-Envoy's website, www.e-envoy.gov.uk, on the same day.

Government Departments and Agencies connected to the Government secure intranet

All sizeable central Government Departments have joined, or are in the process of linking to, the Government secure intranet. Details of those Government Departments which are connected, or planning to connect, will be placed in the Library.

Government Departments' e-business strategies

Most Government Departments have submitted their plans.

Many of the actions we are taking forward relate to matters for which the devolved Administrations in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are responsible for setting targets and implementing initiatives. Details of these are included in the UK Online Annual Report.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Malaria

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what target the Government have set for combating malaria; what additional resources have been allocated to meet this target; and if she will make a statement. [136971]

Clare Short: The United Kingdom is strongly supporting the World Health Organisation (WHO) led Roll Back Malaria (RBM) initiative to achieve the goal of reducing the malaria burden by half by 2010. The RBM initiative provides the vehicle for concerted action by partners, especially in Africa, to deliver more widely the benefits of currently available methods of malaria control to the poorest. Overall UK developmental programme spending on malaria control activities increased to over £19 million in 1999–2000 and is set to increase further. We have contributed £12 million to WHO RBM this year alone. The UK is also supporting public-private partnerships to develop the new generation of affordable drugs required for malaria control in developing countries, both by direct funding to WHO for the Medicines for Malaria Venture (MMV) initiative, the Lapdap product development programme and the Malarone donation.

Palestinian Education

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will suspend the transfer of further funds to the Palestinian Authority for education purposes until the schools under their control are reopened. [137501]

Clare Short: We have provided technical assistance to the Palestinian Ministry of Education for a number of years. Our help has focused on building the capacity of the Ministry, districts and schools to deliver high quality education to Palestinian children. To achieve this we have provided the services of experts, training and a limited amount of equipment. In company with other development partners we are considering further assistance to the education sector. There is no reason to delay this work because of school closures for valid security reasons.

Kosovo

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions she has had with her European counterparts on the reconstruction of Kosovo; and if she will make a statement. [138195]

Mr. Foulkes: We have not had recent discussions on Kosovo with other Ministers but I met key officials on my visit to Kosovo earlier this year and officials of this Department attend meetings of the Management Board of the EU Agency for Reconstruction, which is responsible for the EU's programme in Kosovo. The Department's office in Pristina liaises directly with the agency and with other donors, including EU member states, on reconstruction issues. The agency has made good progress on developing its 360 million euros programme of reconstruction activities in 2000 since its establishment in March. The United Kingdom's contribution to this programme is about £39 million. In addition, we are providing £5 million in bilateral technical assistance in this financial year.

Departmental Employees (New Deal)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many staff her Department employs under the New Deal for Young People. [137959]

Mr. Foulkes: We currently employ two members of staff under the New Deal for Young People and have recently embarked on a new recruitment process for the New Deal arrangements.

Departmental Employees (HIV)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will take steps to ensure that people who are HIV-positive do not suffer discrimination as a result of employment practices followed by her Department. [137792]

Mr. Foulkes: Staff who are HIV-positive are not discriminated against in any of DFID's employment practices. Staff who have AIDS are treated in the same way as others with potentially serious health conditions, bearing in mind DFID's duty of care to ensure the health and safety of staff with immuno-suppressive conditions.

Child Labour (Rugmark Initiative)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the international Rugmark initiative; and what steps she has taken to encourage British carpet companies to take part. [137744]

Mr. Foulkes: We have not been involved with the Rugmark initiative and therefore we have not made an assessment of it.

In general terms labelling can make a positive contribution to the elimination of child labour but impact hinges on effective monitoring, sustainable income replacement and/or access to quality education—if not children may simply be displaced into non export oriented work.

Debt Relief

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations she has received from Oxfam regarding reducing Third World debt. [138405]

Mr. Foulkes: The Secretary of State and I meet regularly with representatives of non-governmental organisations, including Oxfam, to discuss debt and other development issues.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Petrol Costs (Ministerial Cars)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the cost was in each of the past three years of petrol for his Department's fleet of ministerial cars; and how many vehicles there are in that fleet. [135029]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 552W.

Housing Investment

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the total amount was of Government expenditure on capital investment in housing in each year since 1979–80 in (a) England and (b) London, separately identifying expenditure under capital receipts; and what the projected expenditure is in each category for each year until 2003–04. [135802]

Mr. Mullin: The available information on Government allocations, or outturns, for expenditure on housing capital investment made since 1979–80 is set out in the tables. A revised local authority finance regime was introduced from 1990–91, and thus prior years' figures are not directly comparable. Some of the resources allocated through the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund and City Challenge are applied to housing, but this element is not distinguished in the allocations and is therefore not included. Allocations under the Capital Receipts Initiative over the period 1997–98 to 1999–2000 are identified separately in the table.

Government expenditure plans from 2001–02 to 2003–04 which were set out in the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Thomas) on 24 July 2000, Official Report, columns 398–04W, are as follows.

Spending Review 2000 Settlement Housing Capital Programmes

Notes:
1. ADP Gross Expenditure—excludes ADP funding of City Challenge, Rough Sleepers Initiative and ERCF. Data prior to 1981–82 are unavailable as Corporation expenditure was not cash limited in this period. London boroughs' expenditure was not separately identifiable prior to the Corporation's regional re-organisation from 1995–96. The 1992–93 figure excludes £591 million under the Housing Market Package. 2000–01 figure is forecast expenditure.
2. Estate Action—figures up to 1994–95 represent supplementary credit approval (SCA) and continuation scheme allocations; thereafter, direct grant payment outturns within the Single Regeneration Budget. 2000–01 outturn is estimated.
3. Other allocations/credit approvals—covers special programmes for Energy Conservation, Home Insulation, Home Improvement, Private Sector Initiative, Homelessness, Special Grant Allowances, Rural Housing Defects Act, New Town Defective Dwellings, Flats over Shops, Cash Incentive Scheme and Housing Partnership Fund. Figures represent final outturn.
4. Capital Receipts Initiative—initial allocations.
5. Private Sector Renewal Support Grant—distributed via Specified Capital Grant Allowances 1990–91 to 1992–93; SCG-dependent SCAs 1993–94 to 1996–97.
5. Disabled Facilities Grant—initial allocation. DFG was incorporated within SCG and SCG-dependent SCAs prior to 1997–98.
6. Estate Renewal Challenge Fund—2000–01 outturn is estimated.
7. Housing Action Trusts—2000–01 outturn is estimated. Separate figure for London expenditure in 1991–92 and 1992–93 not available.

Low Carbon Technology

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much he has spent on the development of low carbon technology in each year since 1995. [137214]

Mr. Meacher: The Department has spent under its Energy Efficiency Best Practice programme in each year since 1995 the following amounts directly supporting Research and Development (R&D) into low-carbon technologies. On average an additional 30 per cent. has been spent each year on R&D related promotion. The amounts vary from year-to-year according to opportunities and programme priorities. For example, the number of quality R&D proposals put forward changes, the needs of energy users move between R&D and requirements for other types of support. In the last few years needs have focused on more impartial advice.

[1] estimated outturn

The Energy Efficiency Best Practice programme is the UK Government's principal energy efficiency information, advice and research and development programme for the public and private sectors. The programme covers industrial processes, buildings and the managed housing stock.The Department's Partners in Innovation scheme has also supported collaborative projects on low carbon technologies broadly at the level of £50,000 per year. The Partners in Innovation scheme is a central part of the Department's Construction, Innovation and Research programme.

It is the Department's intention to provide a significant stimulus to R&D in future years through the funding recently announced for the Carbon Trust in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith), by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 31 October 2000, Official Report, column 357W.

Bus Fuel Rebate

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how much was paid to bus companies under the bus fuel rebate scheme between the financial year 1998–99 and the latest available date; [137761]

(2) what will be the cost of his plans to extend the bus fuel rebate to community transport schemes; and if he will estimate for each of the last three years the cost of the scheme had the same rebate been extended to community transport schemes in that period; [137760]

(3) what progress he has made on extension of the bus fuel rebate to community transport schemes; and if he will make a statement. [137814]

Mr. Hill: My Department's expenditure on payments of bus fuel duty rebate to bus operators in England was £222 million in 1998–99 and £277 million in 1999–2000. Payments this year are expected to total about £300 million.

As promised in 'Transport 2010', the 10-year plan for transport, we are now working up proposals for extending the rebate to a wider range of community transport schemes. We shall be consulting on these proposals shortly with the intention of having new rules in place for the 2001–02 financial year.

It is not possible at this stage to give an estimate of what the cost of this change will be in future years, or would have been in past years, since this depends on decisions still to be taken on the precise definition of the services which will benefit and on the eligible mileage which they run.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of EU directives on wildlife on SSSIs in England. [138032]

Mr. Mullin: No assessment has been made of the general impact of EU directives on wildlife. However, two EU directives specifically address the protection of wildlife: Council Directive 92/43/EC on the conservation of natural habitats and of wild fauna and flora ("the Habitats Directive") and Council Directive 79/409/EC on the conservation of wild birds ("the Birds Directive"). These generally serve to reinforce the protection of wildlife in England. Under the directives, we have classified 83 special protection areas for birds and have submitted 148 sites to date for possible designation as special areas of conservation for inclusion in a network of sites of European importance. These sites are all already or will be notified as SSSIs, and benefit from special protection under the provisions of the directives.

Aircraft Fuel

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research has been conducted (a) into the quantity of aircraft fuel that is used while aircraft are (i) stacked and (ii) delayed due to air traffic control processes and (b) into the impact on the use of aircraft fuel of introducing a single European air traffic control system; and if he will make a statement. [138262]

Mr. Mullin: Air traffic control delays are, of course, imposed for safety reasons when there is a lack of en-route air traffic control or airport capacity. Stacking and en-route delays do exacerbate fuel burn, but the Government are unaware of any research undertaken to specifically calculate additional fuel burn due to these delays.

Much work has, however, been done across Europe to accommodate high rates of traffic growth safely while minimising air traffic delays. These efforts have resulted in delays in summer 2000 being comparable to summer 1998, but it is recognised that this record needs to be improved.

The reduction of air transport delays is one of the principal objectives of the European Commission's single European sky initiative. The recommendations arising from this initiative are to be presented to the December Transport Council. These are likely to include the need to improve civil/military co-operation and to strengthen the regulatory regime to compel European States to implement commonly agreed capacity enhancements in order to optimise airspace use, and hence reduce delays and fuel burn.

Noise Act 1996

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the local authorities which have implemented in full the provisions of the Noise Act 1996. [138510]

Mr. Hill: There is no requirement for local authorities to inform the Department once they have decided to adopt the Act. The local authorities in England which have, so far as we are aware, adopted the Act, are:

London Borough of Barnet
London Borough of Bromley
London Borough of Havering
London Borough of Waltham Forest
Westminster City Council
East Devon District Council
Guildford Borough Council
Hertsmere Borough Council
Newark and Sherwood District Council
Rushcliffe Borough Council
Shepway District Council
Surrey Heath Borough Council

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what actions he has taken to encourage local authorities to implement the provisions of the Noise Act 1996. [138511]

Mr. Hill: The Noise Act was introduced following consideration of the effectiveness of neighbour noise controls by the Neighbour Noise Working Party and consultations with local authorities. When the Act was introduced the Government at the time left open the option of adopting it to local authorities in the light of their local requirements and available resources.

Following a commitment made to Parliament, we commissioned a review of the Act last year and expect to announce the outcome of this to the House shortly.

Noise Strategy

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce a noise strategy; and if he will make a statement. [138512]

Mr. Meacher: The Government have given a commitment to consider the case for a national ambient noise strategy. A first step will be to issue a consultation paper on the options.

National Forest

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will report on the National Forest Company's progress in creating the national forest in the East Midlands. [139110]

Mr. Mullin: I have arranged for copies of the National Forest Company's Annual Report and its Accounts for 1999–2000 to be placed in the House Libraries.

Trunk Roads

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce further additions to the targeted programme of trunk road improvements. [139225]

Mr. Hill: At the time of the Roads Review in July 1998, we decided to take forward consideration of the A63 Melton Grade Separated Junction in Yorkshire. I can now confirm that following further work, including a full appraisal, and consultation with the regional planning body, the scheme has been added to the targeted programme of improvements. By removing three existing junctions the scheme will improve safety and reduce delays. It will also facilitate access to enable regeneration of a large area of brownfield land to the south of the A63 on the banks of the Humber. Draft orders for the scheme were published on 17 October.

Further additions to the programme will in general depend on the outcome of studies commissioned as a result of the Roads Review and priorities identified in the course of development of Regional Transport Strategies within the context of Regional Planning Guidance.

However, if the objectives of investment in trunk roads under the 10-Year Plan are to be delivered it is important that we make some immediate progress. Therefore, we have initiated consultations with regional planning bodies to consider possible targeted improvements to tackle problems on those parts of the core trunk road network not being considered within a study. As part of this exercise we will also consider whether decisions can be taken on taking forward some targeted improvements within the areas covered by studies without prejudicing the strategic context of the study in question or the emerging Regional Transport Strategy. Specific proposals for improvements will be evaluated using the New Approach to Appraisal to ensure they are consistent with our transport criteria of safety, economy, environmental impact accessibility and integration. We will make an announcement about the outcome of this exercise in the spring.

I can also confirm that work on the programme of 100 early action schemes to tackle localised safety and congestion problems on the trunk road announced at the time of the 10-Year Plan has begun. Copies of a leaflet showing the locations of these schemes have been placed in the Library.

HEALTH

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the element of SSA for each local authority in England was for the placement of children in residential care in the last five years for which figures are available. [135104]

Mr. Hutton: The standard spending assessment for children's personal social services does not include a specific element relating to the placement of children in residential care. The SSA reflects differences between authorities in the potential need for all children's social services, based upon the socio-economic and health characteristics of each authority. It also reflects unavoidable variations in the costs of supplying these services.

The total SSA for children's personal social services in the current financial year is £1,997.7 million. Allocations for each local authority are given in the tables.

School Nurses

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many school nurses were employed in each health authority in England and Wales in (a) 1979, (b) 1987, (c) 1997, (d) 1998 and (e) 1999; and if he will make a statement; [137869]

(2) what proposals he has for adopting a benchmark for the provision of school nurses within a health authority in terms of the number of pupils per school nurse; [137867]

(3) if he has received a copy of the report 'School Nursing within the Public Health Agenda' jointly published by the Community Practitioners' and Health Visitors' Association, the Queen's Nursing Institute and the Royal College of Nursing; and if he will make a statement; [137866]

(4) what proposals he has to increase the total number of school nurses across England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [137868]

Mr. Denham: Data on the numbers of school nurses employed by health authority in 1987 are shown in the table. This information is not available for the other years. Information on numbers of school nurses after 1995 is not available due to a change in occupation codes used.

The school years offer an invaluable opportunity for the promotion of healthy living which sets the pattern for lifestyle and health status in adulthood. School nurses have an important role to play in meeting the needs of school-aged children and young people. The documents "Saving Lives", "Supporting Families" and "Making a Difference" identify and support a comprehensive programme of action for developing the public health role of school nursing. We look forward to receiving a copy of the report "School Nursing within the Public Health Agenda".

It is for health authorities and GP purchasers, with advice from professional colleagues, to determine benchmarks for the numbers, nature and levels of nursing staff and the training required to deliver cost effective school health services. The National Health Service Plan sets out increases in the numbers of nurses undertaking nursing training. Between now and 2004 there will be 5,500 extra nurses and midwives being trained each year than today and around 45,000 nurses and midwives will have come out of training. This means an increased supply of qualified nurses from which school nurses can be recruited and trained.

Hospital Staff Assaults

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 30 October 2000, Official Report, column 242W, on hospital staff assaults, how many of the violent incidents against NHS trust staff in 1998–99 led to (a) prosecution and (b) conviction. [137968]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not held centrally. The cross-Government National Health Service zero tolerance zone campaign, to stamp out violence against staff working in the National Health Service, has been strongly supported by my right hon. Friends the Home Secretary, the Lord Chancellor and the Attorney-General. The campaign makes clearer that employers need to work with the police, magistrates and the Crown Prosecution Service in order to apply a zero tolerance on violence against staff.

At the launch of the campaign last year, the Lord Chancellor said it was entirely legitimate for magistrates to respond decisively to a particular form of criminal behaviour, such as assaults on National Health Service staff, and to impose sentences which have deterrent components. New national sentencing guidelines issued to the Magistrates Courts in September underline our commitment to tackle violence against National Health Service staff. The guidelines now include as aggravating factors, to be taken into account when sentencing, whether the offence occurred in hospital or medical premises and whether the victim was serving the public.

Harrogate and York NHS Trusts

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on proposals to merge Harrogate and York NHS Trusts; and if he will make a statement. [138314]

Mr. Denham: At the present time there are no formal proposals to merge the Harrogate Health Care National Health Service Trust and the York Health Services NHS Trust. Discussions between the North Yorkshire Health Authority and the trusts are ongoing concerning the future configuration of acute services. Should any proposals to change management structures come out of these discussions, they will be the subject of formal consultation.

Elderly People (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the designated time scale and programme for action is to improve the care and health available to older persons in ethnic minorities. [138320]

Mr. Hutton: The National Service Framework for Older People, which is to be introduced from April 2001, will help to ensure that the health and social care needs of older people from all backgrounds are properly addressed.

Guidance on access to social care services to be issued to local councils soon will include advice on addressing the needs of older persons from ethnic minorities.

Out-patient Waiting Times

Mr. St.Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on out-patient waiting times in the West Surrey Health Authority. [137264]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 14 November 2000]: At 30 June this year (latest available figures) there were 3,713 patients who had been waiting 13 weeks or over for an appointment in West Surrey Health Authority following referral by a general practitioner.

The health authority and the South East Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive are in close liaison with the three trusts in West Surrey to address this position.

Hospital Mortuaries

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 9 November 2000, Official Report, column 379W, on hospital mortuaries, if he will list NHS pathology service sites where all or part of the site fails to meet necessary minimum standards. [138461]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 15 November 2000]: With the exception of cervical cytology screening laboratories, accreditation of National Health Service laboratories is voluntary and carried out by Clinical Pathology Accreditation (CPA) UK Ltd. Laboratories accredited by Clinical Pathology Accreditation (CPA) UK Ltd. are listed on the company's website at www.cpa-uk.co.uk. I have placed a copy of this information in the Library.

DEFENCE

Shipyards

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the shipyards in the United Kingdom which are capable of building ships of the size of the future generation of aircraft carriers. [136273]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Gould to Mr. William Ross, dated 16 November 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if he will list the shipyards in the United Kingdom which are capable of building ships of the size of the future generation of aircraft carriers. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

The competing Prime Contractors for the future aircraft carrier—BAE Systems and Thomson Naval Systems—have identified a number of UK shipyards with the potential capacity to participate in the build of the vessels. These include Harland and Wolff in Belfast, Swan Hunter on Tyneside, Cammell Laird at Birkenhead and the BAE Systems' yards at Govan and Barrow. Much will depend on the carrier design that is taken forward and the method of construction; consequently, other UK yard options have not been ruled out. Some of the yards identified by the Prime Contractors face potential build limitations or have access restrictions that could prevent whole-ship construction.

We do not plan to award a contract for the build of CVF until 2004 and no decisions are planned at this stage on yard selection. Ongoing assessment work will include a thorough review of all UK facilities and will address yard suitability, construction/access limitations and the overall cost-effectiveness of potential build strategies.

I hope this explains the position.

Eurocorps

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 30 October 2000, Official Report, column 271W, on Eurocorps, if he will identify by (a) rank and (b) role the augmentees supplied by the United Kingdom to Eurocorps in Kosovo. [138000]

Non-departmental Public Bodies (Scotland)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the non-departmental public bodies responsible to him which have duties relating to Scotland, indicating their budget and staffing in Scotland, the number of Scottish board members and their emoluments. [137697]

Dr. Moonie: None of the non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Ministry of Defence have duties which relate specifically to Scotland, but the following have a remit which covers the United Kingdom:

The RAF Museum

The National Army Museum

The Defence Nuclear Safety Committee.

The remaining information is not held centrally in the form requested. General information on expenditure, staffing, board members and levels of remuneration is published annual in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies". Copies of "Public Bodies 1999" are available in the Libraries of the House and "Public Bodies 2000" is due to be published next month. Information on all Government non-departmental public bodies is also available at the Cabinet Office Public Appointments Directory website www.cabinet-office.gov.uk; information on Ministry of Defence bodies is available at the MOD website www.mod.uk.

Zero-point Energy

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research is being funded by his Department into zero-point energy. [138298]

Dr. Moonie: None.

Mustard Gas (Pigs)

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what new research his Department is undertaking in Porton Down on the effects of mustard gas on pigs; and how many pigs were involved in the testing of mustard gas in Government centres in (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999 and (d) 2000. [138299]

Dr. Moonie: The Defence Evaluation and Research Agency has been undertaking research on behalf of the Ministry of Defence on the effects of mustard gas on pigs at its Chemical and Biological Defence laboratories at Porton Down as part of its studies into improved methods for the treatment of wounds on the battlefield.

Previous research studies to evaluate the technique of dermabrasion as a treatment for established mustard burns were completed at the end of September 1998. The results of this work have been published in the open technical literature. The current research programme is solely concerned with the evaluation of novel protective creams that have the potential to significantly reduce the severity of mustard burns to the skin following exposure.

The number of pigs that have been used in both phases of these studies for the years in question is as follows: two animals in 1997, six animals per year for 1998 and 1999, and a total of 10 animals in 2000 to the current date.

UK Military Equipment Sales

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the occasions on which defence personnel have attended, as part of their duties, promotional events for UK military equipment sales in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000; and what the estimated costs were of such attendance in each year since 1996. [138310]

Dr. Moonie: Within the Ministry of Defence the Defence Export Services Organisation (DESO) is responsible for co-ordinating Government support to industry in promoting sales of UK military equipment, with other parts of MOD assisting as required.

Promotional events in the United Kingdom and overseas attended by defence personnel range from major defence equipment exhibitions and Defence Industry Days (DIDs) to demonstrations of individual items of equipment for potential customers. DIDs are held onboard HM ships when in foreign ports as part of the Fleet visit programme.

There is no central record of visits to such events or the associated attendance costs and it is therefore not possible to provide the information requested.

Major exhibitions and DIDs at which DESO has been represented in support of the UK defence industry between 1998–2000 include:

Royal Fleet Auxiliary

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what industrial action has been taken by Royal Fleet Auxiliary crews in the past six months; which ships were involved; and if he will make a statement. [138431]

Dr. Moonie: Industrial action involving Rail, Maritime and Transport Union (RMT) members of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary commenced in February this year following their rejection of the 1999 pay offer. The action was initially restricted to two days every fortnight; it then became weekly and, from 28 June, continuous. The RMT suspended the industrial action from mid August until the beginning of October to enable talks to take place at the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS).

The industrial action involved the refusal by RMT members to undertake certain tasks, such as cleaning officers' cabins, while ships were in port. The most significant measure was the refusal by deck and engineering personnel to carry out unmooring activity thereby preventing the ship from sailing.

Prior to the action becoming continuous on 28 June, no record of the ships affected was kept, principally because it was possible to adjust ships programmes to minimise the impact. Following that date, three ships were affected: RFAs Sir Geraint, Sir Bedivere and Fort Austin were prevented from leaving port for a period of between four to six weeks during the summer.

All operational commitments have continued to be met throughout the period of the industrial action.

While the industrial dispute arose following the rejection of the 1999 pay offer, the focus changed to a demand by the RMT for additional earned voyage leave (EVL). As part of the 2000 pay round, ratings were granted an additional eight days leave per year. Unfortunately, this was not considered by the RMT to be sufficient to resolve the dispute. However, I am pleased to be able to report that, following agreement in principle to the terms of reference of a working group to set in place a timetable for further improvements to leave, the RMT has now suspended the industrial action. I am also advised that the RMT has written to its members recommending that the industrial action is called off.

Meteorological Office

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he made of the strengths and weaknesses of the bid from Norwich research park for relocation of the Meteorological Office; [138555]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 9 November 2000, Official Report, column 326W, on the Meteorological Office, what account he took of the relative importance of proximity to centres of climatological research in making his decision on the relocation of the Meteorological Office; [138554]

(3) what process for appealing against the decision to relocate the Meteorological Office exists. [138556]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Meteorological Office. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Ewins to Dr. Ian Gibson, dated 16 November 2000:

I am replying to your three questions to the Secretary of State for Defence about the relocation of the Met Office. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Met Office.

As you know, the Under Secretary of State for Defence, Dr Lewis Moonie announced in the House on 9 November that the Met Office has chosen Exeter Business Park as its preferred site for relocation. Exeter was chosen from a shortlist of four sites that also included Beaufort Park in Bracknell, Shinfield Park in Reading and Norwich Research Park. These four sites were those that the Met Office believed could best meet its needs, following a thorough search and careful evaluation of potential sites throughout the United Kingdom.

For Norwich to reach our short list of sites it had performed very favourably against our evaluation criteria. However, only one of the four short-listed sites could be chosen as our preferred site and when evaluating the business benefits and risks, including staff preference, financial appraisals, availability of land with planning consent, local access and other factors, Exeter was the clear choice. It was not an easy decision, but we are certain that Exeter is the best location from which to build a secure and successful future.

In relative terms, the Norwich Research Park site had a number of strengths, notably the opportunities it offered for lower operating costs and improved living standards for our staff compared with the other sites in the Southeast. There would, in addition, have been good opportunities for collaboration with the University of East Anglia (UEA), which would also have been a valuable source of high quality graduate staff. Moreover, there was strong local political support and also from key organisations in the area, including Norfolk County Council, Norwich City Council, the Regional Development Agency and the University.

The site also had some weaknesses in comparison to our preferred site. For example, there were serious doubts, raised at a late stage in the evaluation process, as to whether the site was actually available. We also had some concerns that the site was somewhat isolated on the fringe of the City and would not offer the profile we were seeking as a world-leading science based organisation. Moreover, our staff demonstrated a preference for Exeter. We have offered to give Norwich City Council's Chief Executive and her team a detailed de-brief in order that lessons may be learnt for similar initiatives in the future.

We recognise the UAE's particular strength in the field of climate science and impact analysis and the importance of maintaining and strengthening the close working relationship we have with them. There are, of course, many other organisations throughout the United Kingdom and around the World with whom we have close links on a range of subjects, and others with whom we will develop links as we pursue our strategy of diversification into wider environmental services. With modern communications we are firmly of the view that such relationships can be achieved very well indeed from Exeter.

As a trading fund agency, the choice of preferred site rested with me as Chief Executive and was made with the support of my Management Board, taking full account of the interests of the Met Office's customers—both in the public and private sectors—and our staff. This choice was made in the very best, long-term interests of the Met Office, following a thorough and rigorous evaluation process based on pre-determined criteria. I presented the choice of preferred site to both Dr Moonie and the Secretary of State for Defence who, having weighed all the issues, were content to endorse the decision.

The two consortia with whom the Met Office is negotiating over the provision and ongoing maintenance of the new accommodation will now work up detailed proposals for the Exeter site. Tenders are due to be submitted by the end of February 2001 and a contract is expected to be placed by June 2001.

Homosexuals

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the additional cost to public funds was in (a) legal costs incurred by the (i) Government and (ii) applicants and (b) damages awarded to the applicants by the decision to continue to contest cases relating to homosexuals in the armed forces (i) between 16 February 1996 and 1 May 1997 and (ii) after 2 May 1997. [138466]

Mr. Spellar: Compensation and legal costs have been paid in the four cases covered by the European Court of Human Rights judgment of 27 September 1999 and the figures are shown in the table. In addition, in light of the ECHR judgment, the Secretary of State for Defence authorised that settlement negotiations commence with those individuals discharged from the armed forces as a result of their homosexuality who had submitted Employment Tribunal applications and whose account is accepted as being substantially factually true. The level of compensation paid to those applicants who settled their cases during the periods in question, together with legal costs incurred by the Minister of Defence, are also shown in the table. Legal costs incurred by Employment Tribunal applicants are not normally recoverable from the Defendant and therefore the Ministry of Defence has no record of such costs. Settlement negotiations on the remainder of the outstanding cases remain ongoing.

	16 February 1996 to 1 May 1997	2 May 1997 to date
Compensation paid in ECHR cases	0	324,875
Claimants' legal costs paid in ECHR cases	0	81,200
Compensation paid to ET applicants	0	79,000
Legal costs incurred by the Ministry of Defence	12,090	156,507

HOME DEPARTMENT

Petrol Costs (Ministerial Cars)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost was in each of the past three years of petrol for his Department's fleet of ministerial cars; and how many vehicles there are in that fleet. [134994]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office does not directly manage ministerial vehicles; this function is undertaken by the Government Car and Despatch Agency. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, gave on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 552W.

Press Office

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons are currently employed in the Home Office Press Office and at what grades; what has been the total cost to public funds of the recent expansion of the Home Office Press Office following the implementation of the report by Clear Communications; and if he will make a statement. [134973]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 26 October 2000]: The total number of people employed in the press office is 27. This is comprised of five Senior Information Officers, 16 Information Officers, an Assistant Information Officer and a Chief Immigration Officer on attachment. In addition, there is an administrative support team of four people comprised of one Higher Executive Officer, one Administrative Officer and two Administrative Assistants.

As I told the House previously, on 2 March 2000, Official Report, column 383W, the estimated cost of extra staff will be up to £400,000 in a full year, to bring total costs to around £1.6 million. This expansion has proved necessary to cope with the widened responsibilities and activities of the Home Office since May 1997 (including the larger programme of constitutional and other reforms) and a significant increase in calls to the press office over the last three years.

In addition there has been a one-off cost of refurbishing the press office and the provision of additional equipment and IT support which will be in the region of £200,000.

As I told the House previously, on 24 July 2000, Official Report, column 746, £82,000 was spent on recruitment advertising and the external consultant's report which recommended that the Press Office be restructured and expanded by between eight and 10 press officers.

Seasonal Agricultural Work

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from (a) Concordia and (b) other interested parties concerning the number of student permits allowed for assistance and training associated with seasonal agricultural work; what has been his response; and if he will make a statement. [137006]

Mrs. Roche: Representations in support of an increase in the quota of non-European Economic Area (EEA) students participating in the Seasonal Agricultural Worker Scheme (SAWS) have been made on behalf of various interested parties, including the National Farmers Union. Concordia (YSV) Ltd., one of the approved scheme operators, had indicated support for an increase.

The Government have listened to the concerns of the agricultural industry and have agreed to increase the annual quota of students from 10,000 to 15,200 with effect from the 2001 season.

Race-related Offences

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sentences were imposed on people convicted in (a) 1999 and (b) 1998 of incitement to racial hatred. [137891]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Data taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database are given in the table.

Number of persons sentenced at all courts for offences[1] under Part III of the Public Order Act 1986, by type of offence and disposal, England and Wales, 1998 and 1999

Offence description	Year	Total sentenced	Conditional discharge	Fine	Compensation	Probation order	Combination order	Fully suspended sentence	Immediate custody

Number Plates

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce measures to require that scrap vehicles have number plates destroyed on arrival at scrap yards in order to reduce crime involving the use of false number plates. [137630]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government have no plans to introduce such measures. We are, however, looking closely at the recommendations of the Vehicle Crime Reduction Action Team that the motor salvage industry and the supply and issue of number plates should be regulated by law in order to reduce crime.

European Union

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress made under the scoreboard to review progress on the creation of an area for freedom, security and justice in the European Union. [138085]

Mrs. Roche: The European Council meeting in Tampere on 15 and 16 October 1999 decided that it would keep under constant review progress made towards developing the Union as an area of freedom, security and justice in line with its own conclusions ("the Tampere milestones"). It called on the Commission to come forward with an appropriate proposal for a scoreboard to that end. The Commission presented its scoreboard at the Justice and Home Affairs Council meeting on 27 March 2000, at which it was discussed by the Council. The scoreboard was designed to be regularly updated. The Commission produced a revised version of the scoreboard at the Justice and Home Affairs Council meeting on 29 May 2000. A further revised version is expected for the Justice and Home Affairs Council meeting on 30 November-1 December 2000.

There has been progress on a wide range of issues covered by the Tampere conclusions over the past year. Developments range from the establishment of the Police Chiefs Task Force to the adoption of the European Refugee Fund. The first ever joint meeting of the Justice and Home Affairs and ECOFIN Councils took place on 17 October to consider measures to combat money laundering to implement Tampere conclusions 51–58.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary regularly reports to the European Scrutiny Committee on the outcome of Justice and Home Affairs Council meetings, in correspondence and in response to Parliamentary Questions. Copies of this correspondence are available in the Library.

EU Immigration and Asylum Policy

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the (a) purpose and (b) present activities of (i) the Odysseus Programme and (ii) the Robert Schuman legal project. [138081]

Mrs. Roche: The Odysseus programme provides training, exchanges and co-operation in the fields of asylum, immigration and crossing of external borders in the 15 member states of the European Union. The programme provides for the possible involvement of the applicant countries. Other non-member countries may also be associated, provided this is in accordance with the programme's objectives.

The programme is supporting approximately 40 projects during 2000, including:

projects aimed at assisting applicant countries with the accession process, for example presentation of the European Union acquis in the field of immigration, asylum and control of external borders for Turkish officials;

a seminar on the fight against networks in illegal immigration; and a seminar on liaison officers dealing with migration.

Robert Schuman legal project:

The Robert Schuman programme offers financial assistance to national training schemes in Community law for judges and lawyers. The project falls within the ministerial responsibility of the Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason a Council directive on minimum standards on procedure for granting and withdrawing refugee status has been proposed; and what his policy is on it. [138089]

Mrs. Roche: The Treaty establishing the European Community envisages the adoption of minimum standards on procedures for granting or withdrawing refugee status within a period of five years after the entry into force of the Treaty of Amsterdam. The importance of such measures was reaffirmed at the Special European Council in Tampere in October 1999. The scoreboard to review progress on the creation of an area of freedom, security and justice in the European Union requires the Commission to submit a proposal for minimum standards on asylum procedures with a view to adoption in April 2001.

The Commission presented a proposed directive to the Council on 28 September. The intention of the proposed directive is to establish minimum standards for the fairness and efficiency of asylum procedures in all the member states. This should make a significant contribution to promoting the balance of effort between member states in terms of the receipt of asylum seekers.

The Government's initial view on this proposed directive will be set out in an Explanatory Memorandum which will be deposited shortly.

Grotius Programme

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on changes planned for the Grotius Programme in the course of the Treaty of Amsterdam. [138083]

Mrs. Roche: The Grotius programme, which is concerned with incentives and exchanges for legal practitioners, runs from 1996–2000. Following the Treaty of Amsterdam, which provided for judicial co-operation in the field of civil law to take place under the Treaty establishing the European Community and for judicial co-operation in the field of criminal law to take place under the Treaty on European Union, it will be necessary to split the Grotius programme in future. The Commission has proposed the extension of the Grotius programme in the area of civil law for the period of one year only, to enable consideration of its future and its relationship with other programmes, notably the Robert Schuman programme. In the area of criminal law, the Commission has indicated that it is considering proposing the extension of the Grotius programme for a period of two years.

Fire Stations

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent advice he has received from HM Inspectorate of Fire Services on proposals to reduce manning in (a) Heswall Fire Station and (b) other fire stations from 24 hour to day time manning. [138424]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Advice from Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Fire Services would not normally be sought until after receipt of an application to reduce a fire authority's establishment under section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947. The information is as follows:

(a) To date we have not received an application from Merseyside Fire and Civil Defence Authority regarding fire cover provision at Heswall fire station.

(b) There has been only one such section 19 application this year, on which advice from Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Fire Services is awaited. This application was submitted by Merseyside Fire and Civil Defence Authority in relation to Formby fire station.

Personal Safety

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to facilitate the establishment of a national centre for studies and training in personal safety from crime. [138645]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There are a number of organisations working in this field and the Home Office encourages all initiatives in this area. The Home Office has recently had discussions with the Suzy Lamplugh Trust about how we could assist them with the setting up of their International Personal Safety Centre for the reduction of Crime and Violence against the Person.

City Status

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in the announcement of the result of the competition for city status to mark the millennium [138508]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: At no point was a date set for the announcement of the result of the Millennium city status competition, but as I have indicated on previous occasions we anticipate an announcement by the end of the year.

ADT v. UK

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total cost was to public funds of (a) defending ADT v. UK, including the legal costs of both sides and (b) the damages awarded. [138463]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The applicant was awarded £20,929.05 damages in respect of the cost of defending criminal proceedings, travel expenses, prosecution costs, loss for items confiscated and destroyed and non-pecuniary losses. In addition, the applicant was awarded £13,771.28 in respect of costs and expenses.

As regards the Government's legal costs, much of the work involved was carried out by officials and lawyers already employed by Government. We are not therefore able to estimate the total cost of defending the action before the European Court of Human Rights.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what legislative action he proposes to take following the decision in the case of ADT v. UK. [138464]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government set up the Sex Offences Review in January 1999. Its terms of reference were to make proposals for reform of the law on sex offences which were among other things compliant with the European Convention on Human Rights.

The report of the review is contained in 'Setting the Boundaries'. The review recommended that the offence of gross indecency should be repealed. It was that offence for which ADT was convicted and which, in the circumstances of his conviction, was found to have been a breach of ADT's private life under Article 8.

The consultation period finishes on 1 March 2001. Following this the Government will consider legislation for a comprehensive reform of the law on sexual offences, including gross indecency, when parliamentary time allows.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what administrative action he intends to take in relation to (a) existing and (b) future charges of gross indecency in the light of the decision in the case of ADT v. UK. [138465]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We have made it clear that this area of the law is the subject of recommendations contained in 'Setting the Boundaries'. Until the law is changed it remains in force and enforceable. There is no administrative action which the Home Office can or should take to prevent enforcement of the law.

However, any decision not to prosecute any individual under the Sexual Offences Act 1956 will be a matter for the independent Crown Prosecution Service. In determining whether to proceed with a prosecution the CPS will have regard to the public interest and in doing so will take account of the Court's judgment and the Human Rights Act 1998.

Gambling Review Body

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will implement the recommendations of the Gambling Review Body in full as soon as practicable after its reports. [138719]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Gambling Review Body is due to report next summer. We shall give its report careful consideration, bearing in mind the generally acknowledged need to modernise the laws regulating gambling.

Armed Robberies

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many armed robberies were committed with (a) licensed pistols, (b) unlicensed pistols, (c) other licensed firearms and (d) other unlicensed firearms, in each of the years 1998, 1999 and 2000 to date. [138689]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Details of the legal status of firearms used in offences are not generally available, but it is thought that most, if not all, will be illegally held. The numbers of handguns and other firearms used in robberies are as follows, for the most recently available information:

Firearms used in robberies

Financial year	Number of handguns	Number of other firearms[1]
1997–98	1,811	1,128
1998–99	1,814	1,159

[1] Including supposed and imitation firearms, and air weapons.

Sapurui Sakalatuala

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Security Service will release files from the inter-war period relating to Sapurui Sakalatuala; and if he will make a statement. [138691]

Mr. Straw: The Security Service is still reviewing and releasing records covering the Second World War and has just made public a fourth tranche of files from this period. The Security Service will, in due course in light of resources, be reviewing its inter-war records in preparation for further releases. Under current plans, I do not expect the Security Service to begin reviewing its inter-war records before the year 2001.

Policing (Cleveland)

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the Cleveland Police Authority regarding expenditure on Operation Lancet; and if he will make a statement. [138688]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I will be meeting the Chair of the Police Authority and the Chief Constable at their request on 29 November to discuss various matters related to the policing of Cleveland.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Petrol Costs (Ministerial Cars)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the cost was in each of the past three years of petrol for his Department's fleet of ministerial cars; and how many vehicles there are in that fleet. [134935]

Mr. Wills: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Cabinet Office on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 552W.

Departmental Employees (New Deal)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many individuals his Department has recruited from the New Deal for Young People; [134688]

(2) how many staff in his Department are employed under the New Deal for Young People. [137956]

Mr. Wills: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office, on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 551W.

Adult and Community Learning Fund

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the operation to date of the Adult and Community Learning Fund, with particular reference to (a) total expenditure, (b) the criteria for scheme selection and (c) the monitoring and accountability of schemes funded from the ACLF. [136307]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 6 November 2000]: The total expenditure on the Adult and Community Learning Fund (ACLF) to date is £11.4 million. A further £8.6 million will be spent between now and March 2002.

The Fund supports activities in England which take learning into sectors of the community rarely reached by traditional educational institutions. 309 projects have been supported to date. The criteria are set out in a Prospectus which provides guidance to applicants. Projects must be innovative, of good quality and sustainable. They must also involve learners in managing project activities and building partnerships. Funding must not duplicate or extend existing provision or organisational support. At least one community or voluntary group must lead on, or be an equal partner in, bids for funding.

ACLF projects are managed on my Department's behalf by the Basic Skills Agency (BSA) and the National Institute of Adult Continuing Education (NIACE), which are accountable to the Department and its auditors. Progress on each project is monitored by BSA or NIACE as part of their contracted role as joint managers of the Fund.

In his recent Remit Letter to the Learning and Skills Council, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State draws the Council's attention to the need to secure, at local level, imaginative and attractive learning opportunities which will draw in people unused to learning, or who see learning in institutions as not for them.

Student Fees

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will remove parental income as a means of assessing student fees payable; and if he will make a statement. [136979]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 8 November 2000]: No. The current assessment system is working well and ensures that currently about a third of dependent students from lower income families do not make any contribution to tuition fees, and I expect this to rise to some two fifths from September 2001 as a result of a change to the contribution threshold. This is in the context of over 40 per cent. of all students making no contribution to tuition fees under the present system, rising to about 50 per cent. from September 2001. The new student finance arrangements that we introduced share the cost of higher education fairly between students, their families and taxpayers generally, and provide essential resources for investment in universities and colleges.

Departmental Research Budget

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the budget was for research and consultancy for his Department for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000 and (d) 2000–01. [137304]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 8 November 2000]: Research and consultancy is not generally budgeted for as a discrete item within the Department. Most expenditure of this type is met from wider programme or administrative budgets.

Head Teachers

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools are without permanent head teachers in (i) England and (ii) Norfolk. [137819]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 10 November 2000]: The table shows temporarily filled vacant full-time head teacher posts in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England and Norfolk in January 2000.

	Nursery/ primary	Secondary	Nursery, primary and secondary
England
Temporarily filled as a percentage of head teachers in post	2.1	2.3	2.1
Number of posts	390	90	480
Norfolk
Temporarily filled as a percentage of head teachers in post	3.4	0.0	2.9
Number of posts	13	0	13

Head teachers have a key role in boosting standards in schools. We are establishing a National College for School Leadership to give a focus to school leadership development, and are designing a coherent package of training and development programmes for aspiring, new and serving head teachers.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make extra funds available to fund special needs education in rural areas. [138277]

Jacqui Smith: Resources are distributed to local education authorities through Standard Spending Assessments. These are calculated using information about the demographic, economic and social characteristics of an area. This includes a sparsity factor, which would take account of additional transport costs in areas such as Cornwall with dispersed populations, and consequently higher costs of transporting pupils with special educational needs.

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137426]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 13 November 2000]: I fully support the aims of the International Year of Volunteers. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and all the Ministers in this Department intend to take part in voluntary activity during 2001. My Department also encourages staff to participate in a wide range of voluntary activities, often during working hours, and will continue to do so.

Recycled Computers

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the bidding process will commence for the second phase of the Computers Within Reach scheme. [138490]

Mr. Wills: We shall be extending the scheme in the areas listed in my answer to my right hon. Friend's earlier questions, of 10 November 2000, Official Report, column 437W. We are currently looking at opportunities for integrating the scheme with other related initiatives in disadvantaged areas, details of which will be given as soon as possible. We are also awaiting the evaluation of the first weeks of the scheme before we make final decisions on next steps.

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many low cost recycled personal computers have been provided to low income families since 1998; how the recipients have been selected; and what evaluation has been carried out of the programme to date. [138635]

Mr. Wills: I announced the commencement of the Computers Within Reach scheme on 25 October 2000 for those on certain benefits who were seeking to gain or retain employment. The first phase of the scheme will provide up to 35,000 recycled PCs in various areas in England until 31 March 2001. Potential applicants have been asked to contact the free telephone helpline 08080 100 900 in the first instance.

The PCs will be delivered following the applications being processed by the relevant regional contractor. I am writing to all MPs with details of the scheme and the pilot areas to be covered in this first phase. The PCs will be provided in areas where there are locally based groups that made a successful bid to be part of the scheme. The evaluation arrangements are currently being finalised. I will write to my hon. Friend with the outcome of the tender exercise once this has been completed.

The first phase pilots are located in areas within the following locations:

Birmingham
Bradford
Hull
Leeds
Knowsley
Liverpool
London
Manchester
Plymouth
Portsmouth
Sheffield

City Learning Centres

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place in the Library a list of the addresses of City Learning Centres. [138634]

Ms Estelle Morris: A list of addresses of those City Learning Centres due to open in the financial year 2000–01 has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Further Centres that will open from September 2001 have been allocated to Excellence in Cities areas and partnerships are currently working on detailed plans on where Centres will be sited and how they will operate.

Internet Safety Guidance

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's Superhighways Safety Pack. [138639]

Mr. Wills: Copies of the new version of this comprehensive internet safety guidance have today been placed in the Library. We have produced, and recently updated, the pack for teachers and parents, providing guidance on the wide range of internet safety measures which they can adopt. These range from using "walled gardens" and filtering software, to monitoring and tracking pupil access and providing "user contracts" for pupils, spelling out how they should behave.

The pack is also available on the internet at http://safety.ngfl.gov.uk

Online Learning

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place in the Library a list of the addresses of (a) UK online learning centres and (b) ISI support centres. [138643]

Mr. Wills: I will write to my hon. Friend with a full list of the successful first phase of UK online centres funded through the Capital Modernisation Fund (CMF) by the end of November 2000, along with a list of DTI's UK online for business (formally Information Society Initiative) advisers and their contact details. Copies will also be placed in the Library.

TREASURY

Investors Compensation

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the average amount of compensation paid by the ICS in relation to the cases referred to the investors' compensation scheme by the Personal Investment Authority Ombudsman in each of the last two years, as a result of an award not having been paid due to the offending company having been struck off the PIA Register; [135271]

(2) how many decisions made by the Personal Investment Authority Ombudsman in each of the last two years in favour of the complainant did not lead to the payment of compensation because the offending company was struck off the PIA Register before payment was made; and of these cases how many were referred to the Investors' Compensation Scheme; [135273]

(3) what was (a) the average amount of compensation paid and (b) the average amount of compensation awarded in cases where no payment was made due to the offending company having been struck off the Personal Investment Authority Register in relation to decisions made by the PIA Ombudsman in each of the last two years in favour of the complainant. [135272]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The previous history of cases dealt with by ICS is not centrally recorded, including whether they have been previously dealt with by PIAOB.

The information requested on compensation is not available. Compensation often does not take the form of a cash award to a complainant.

Census

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date the printing of the census forms for Wales and England began. [135154]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 30 October 2000]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Simon Thomas, dated 15 November 2000:

As National Statistician and Registrar General for England and Wales I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking when the printing of the census forms for Wales and England began. (135154)

The contractual arrangements for printing the forms were agreed in February [illegible]. The contract required printing of the forms for Wales to begin on 7 July. Printing of the Welsh language version of the household forms for Wales subsequently began on that date, followed by the printing of the English language version on 2 August.

Details of the arrangements for the consultation on the 2001 Census in Wales have been widely publicised. The shape and content of the Census has been formulated in consultation with users through a structure of Advisory Committees, working Groups and topic-related sub-groups, Census News, information papers, the Internet and ad hoc public meetings. The assessment of the resulting business cases for census topics culminated in the Government's proposals set out in the White Paper in March 1999. In Wales in particular, formal consultation is carried out through the Welsh Census Users Network Group at which each of the 22 local government authorities in Wales is represented as well as a range of other public bodies and authorities. Additional bilateral consultation is carried out with the National Assembly for Wales and the Welsh Language Board.

In addition to this extensive programme of consultation a major public rehearsal of the 2001 Census was carried out in April 1999, including coverage of around 7,800 households in Gwynedd and 6,900 households in Ceredigion.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will answer the question tabled by the hon. Member for Ceredigion for reply on 30 October regarding the date upon which the printing of the Census forms for Wales commenced. [137210]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have done so today.

Import Duty

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will increase the limit above which import duty is paid on goods ordered through the internet, post and telephone. [136982]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 8 November 2000]: UK policy is not to discriminate in favour of certain types of trade.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families he estimates are eligible for the Working Families Tax Credit but not claiming it. [137615]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimating the number of families currently eligible for the Working Families Tax Credit requires, among other things, detailed survey data for 2000–01. These are not yet available.

The number of families receiving WFTC at the end of August is provisionally estimated at 1,123,000, compared to 817,000 families who were in receipt of Family Credit in August 1999.

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to measure the level of fraud in applications for Working Families Tax Credit. [137389]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 November 2000]: The Inland Revenue is currently undertaking an exercise to benchmark the level of fraud within Working Families Tax Credit and Disabled Person's Tax Credit. The findings of this exercise will be used by the Inland Revenue to ensure their tax credits compliance work is carried out in the most effective way.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the annual cost to the Exchequer would be of disregarding the widow's maintenance allowance in respect of the Working Families Tax Credit. [137736]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 10 November 2000]: I am not aware of a widow's maintenance allowance.

EU Budget Lines

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Government received itemised expenditure of EU Budget Line B3–301, Information Outlets, for the latest year; what is his policy on the optional targeting of such funds; and if he will identify how much funding went to each recipient, naming the recipients, with particular reference to expenditure in the UK. [138166]

Miss Melanie Johnson: It is within the remit of the Commission to decide the criteria for the targeting of such funds.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the European Communities budget lines which the Government are seeking to delete. [138082]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government look for good value for money on all budget lines, and seek to ensure that any spending is within the financial perspective agreed at Berlin in March 1999.

Special Compliance Office

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to increase the (a) number and (b) proportion of Inland Revenue personnel working in the Special Compliance Office. [138322]

Dawn Primarolo: Over the next two years, more than £2.5 million will be added to the budget of Special Compliance Office.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the last tax year for which data are available, what was the (a) annual budget of the Inland Revenue Special Compliance Office, and (b) estimated additional tax revenue which its activities generated. [138321]

Dawn Primarolo: For the year to 31 March 2000, the total budget of Special Compliance Office was £24.3 million. The office brought into charge additional tax, interest and penalties of £371 million during the year. It also concluded criminal proceedings against 40 defendants in respect of revenue-related offences.

VAT (Places of Worship)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to Cm 4917, if he will define places of worship in respect of consideration for a reduction in VAT. [138197]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 13 November 2000]: Places of worship are listed religious buildings such as cathedrals, churches, chapels, meeting-houses, synagogues, mosques and temples.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the plans announced in his pre-Budget Statement to reduce VAT on church repairs in the context of EU rules governing VAT. [138738]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government are attracted to the idea of offering a reduced rate for the repair of listed buildings which are used as places of worship, such as churches, chapels, synagogues, meeting-houses, temples and mosques. As a first step I have written to the European Commission on 8 November to ask for consideration of early legislative proposals to add repairs, maintenance and improvements to listed places of worship to the list of permissible reduced rates.

Urban Regeneration

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the proposals for regeneration in his pre-Budget Report will fulfil the recommendations contained in the Rogers report: "Towards an Urban Renaissance". [138246]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 13 November 2000]: The pre-Budget Report 2000 announced that the following package of measures to promote urban regeneration would be introduced in Budget 2001:

(i) complete exemption from stamp duty for all property transactions in Britain's most disadvantaged communities;

(ii) accelerated payable tax credit for cleaning up contaminated land;

(iii) immediate tax relief to property owners for the costs of converting redundant space over shops and other commercial premises into flats for letting;

(iv) a reduced rate of VAT for the cost of converting residential properties into a different number of dwellings;

(v) an adjustment to the zero rate of VAT to provide relief for the sale of renovated houses that have been empty for 10 years or more.

Of these proposed measures, the first three respond to specific recommendations made in the Urban Task Force report "Towards an Urban Renaissance", chaired by Lord Rogers. The remaining two move some way towards Lord Rogers's recommendations for changes to VAT. In addition, the Government announced that it would continue to monitor the urban regeneration companies, and consider how a tax relief may help, responding to a further recommendation made in the report.

Contaminated Land (Tax Relief)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tax relief he will provide to property investors for the clean up of contaminated land. [138233]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 13 November 2000]: The scheme announced in the PBR will give accelerated tax relief for the cost of cleaning up contaminated land. Final details will be included in my right hon. Friend's Budget.

Residential Conversions

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who will be eligible for tax relief for creating flats over shops; and if there will be an upper limit to such relief in respect of the (a) property and (b) property owners. [138235]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 13 November 2000]: Under the proposals announced by the Chancellor in the pre-Budget Report, 100 per cent. capital allowances for the costs of converting vacant and under-used space over shops would be available to property owners who create flats for letting. The scheme will include checks to ensure this enhanced relief does not subsidise high-value properties that require no encouragement. It is not proposed to limit the total relief available to a property owner.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated number of flats over shops which will be created by his proposal for capital allowances. [138234]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 13 November 2000]: The proposed scheme for 100 per cent. capital allowances for flats over shops is expected to support the conversion of over 1,000 flats each year over the next five years.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice he has received from the European Commission on his plans to (a) reduce VAT rates on residential conversions and (b) remove VAT on developers renovating and selling houses which have been empty for 10 years or more. [138222]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 13 November 2000]: Item 9 of Annexe H to the VAT Sixth Directive allows a reduced rate for alteration and conversion work to houses which is done to further a social policy. The removal of VAT from the sale of renovated houses that have been empty for 10 years is a minor adjustment and updating of the existing zero rate. There is therefore no need to seek the Commission's advice on VAT law.

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137423]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 13 November 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Secretary of State for the Home Department on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 531W.

All Treasury staff are allowed one day's extra leave to undertake voluntary work in a private capacity.

Tax Returns (Internet)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 31 October 2000, Official Report, column 412W, on tax returns, if he will make a statement on the pilot of internet VAT returns. [137850]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 13 November 2000]: A limited live pilot of internet VAT returns started on 1 March 2000. A number of businesses were invited to participate after registering their interest in the internet VAT return at the early stages of development.

Initial feedback from businesses in the live pilot has been favourable. Customs are continuing to develop the system with a view to making it more widely available during 2001.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to Cm 4917, on what basis he expects October corporation tax receipts to be a guide to corporation tax receipts for the October to March period in fiscal year 2000–01. [138460]

Dawn Primarolo: Large companies are now required to pay their corporation tax in quarterly instalments with, during the four year transition period, a subsequent balancing payment. October's receipts of tax were mainly:

instalment payments by companies with calendar or financial year accounting periods and these companies should pay similar amounts in January next year; and balancing payments by companies with 1999 calendar year accounts and these levels of payments can help estimation of other companies' balancing payments due in the rest of the year.

Commercial Road Vehicles Vignette

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to issue detailed proposals for the vignette for commercial road vehicles in the United Kingdom; and what the daily charge will be. [138287]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 14 November 2000]: The Chancellor announced the Government's intention to introduce a 'vignette' as part of his package of positive measures for the haulage industry.

We will be consulting with representatives from the haulage industry on the introduction of the scheme. Further details will be announced in due course.

National Insurance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the lower earnings limit (a) for crediting towards national insurance benefits and (b) for national insurance contribution payments (i) was in April 1997 and (ii) will be in April 2001; and if he will estimate for each local authority in Tyne and Wear the numbers of employees who will be credited with national insurance contributions, but not paying them in April 2001. [138332]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 14 November 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to Inland Revenue press release "IR1—Income Tax Allowances and National Insurance Contributions".

I am afraid that it is not possible to provide a reliable estimate for the number of employees in Tyne and Wear who will be credited with national insurance contributions, but not paying them.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the annual additional revenue raised by his proposal in the pre-Budget Report to increase the upper limit on national insurance contributions for employed and self employed. [138622]

Dawn Primarolo: In the March 1999 Budget the Chancellor announced a large reform of National Insurance and figures were given in table 1.3 of the "March 1999 Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report". These estimates were updated in the "March 2000 Financial Statement and Budget Report" appendix A2.

Widowers

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of paying the bereavement allowance to all men widowed between 6 April 1994 and 5 April 2000; and if he will make a statement. [138103]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 14 November 2000]: The Inland Revenue does not generally hold information on whether men are widowed and therefore any costing is very approximate. We estimate the cost of extending the widow's bereavement allowance to men retrospectively for the tax years 1994–95 to 1999–2000 would be about £180 million.

The Government recognise that the previous system of tax allowances did not target support fairly on those who needed it most. A new system has now been introduced, which focuses resources on families with children. Most widows and widowers with children under 16 will, from next April, be entitled to the Children's Tax Credit, worth over twice as much as the Widow's Bereavement Allowance. We believe that this will give the right support to those who need it most.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many men were widowed between 6 April 1994 and 5 April 2000 in (a) the UK and (b) each Scottish local authority area. [138102]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 14 November 2000]: There are around 80,000 men widowed each year in the UK of whom some 7,500 are in Scotland. I regret that it is not possible to provide a reliable estimate for the number of men widowed in each Scottish local authority area.

Special Advisers (Budget)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what restrictions apply to contact between his special advisers and journalists between publication of the Budget Report 2000 and the 2001 Budget. [136193]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Special advisers carry out their duties in accordance with the terms and conditions of their contract (similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments).

Departmental Employees (New Deal)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff his Department employs under the New Deal for Young People. [137951]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 13 November 2000, Official Report, columns 551–52W.

Pensioners

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of people who will be of pensionable age in each of the next 10 years. [138045]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 13 November 2000]: The most recent actual figures relate to mid-1999. They are given in "Population Trends 101", Table 1.5. The Government Actuary's latest projections of the number of people over state pension age, based on the population at mid-1998, are available on the CD ROM accompanying "National population projections: 1998-based" (ONS Series no. 22) or on the GAD website http://www.gad.gov.uk/population/1998/pop98.html.

Disadvantaged Communities

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to Cm 4917, if he will list the most disadvantaged communities which will qualify for tax reliefs under his regeneration proposals. [138232]

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which areas of Merseyside will qualify for exemption from Stamp Duty. [138333]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 13 November 2000]: The Government are working to ensure that the Stamp Duty measure announced in the pre-Budget Report is targeted at the most disadvantaged areas in all parts of the UK.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement of 8 November 2000, Official Report, columns 315–27, on the pre-Budget Report, what estimate he has made of the impact of changes in stamp duty to (a) property sales and (b) other economic variables in deprived areas as defined in Table B4 of the document "Building Long Term Prosperity for All"; and if he will make a statement. [138282]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 14 November 2000]: The Government will work to ensure that the stamp duty measure announced in the pre-Budget Report is targeted at the most disadvantaged areas.

This is part of a comprehensive package of measures worth £1 billion over five years which will complement and build on measures already in place to revive our most disadvantaged communities.

Individual Savings Account

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the operation of ISAs. [138701]

Miss Melanie Johnson: A review of the operation of ISAs began work in April this year, and changes arising from the review were announced in the recent Pre-Budget Report. These include extending cash ISAs to 16 and 17-year-olds, increasing the use of electronic business for ISAs, and the alignment of the PEP rules on investments, transfers and administrative procedures with the more flexible ISA rules. Further details can be found in the Inland Revenue Press Release "Encouraging Britain to Save" issued on 8 November.

Euro

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the cost to Government Departments to date has been of the national euro changeover plan. [138725]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Public sector spending on changeover planning to date is set out in the Treasury's Fourth Report on Euro Preparations, published on 6 November 2000. Copies of the report are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the cost has been to date of euro information campaigns directed specifically at business. [138732]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor) on 28 July 2000, Official Report, column 1016.

Personal Computers

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many personal computers have been provided by private sector employers for use at home by their employees, for which a tax allowance has been claimed; and what the value was of the computers provided. [138686]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is not available.

Petroleum Revenue Tax

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations his Department received on Petroleum Revenue Tax in relation to the pre-Budget Report. [138515]

Mr. Timms: The Treasury has received a number of representations on Petroleum Revenue Tax.

Tax Harmonisation

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the relationship between his plans to abolish the withholding tax on the payment of interest between companies and the Council of Ministers' plans for an EU withholding tax. [138739]

Mr. Timms: The Budget proposal to abolish withholding tax on international bonds and simplification represents a helpful simplification of the tax system, as does the proposal in the pre-Budget Report whereby, subject to consultation, the requirement to withhold tax on most intra-UK interest and royalties payments between UK companies within the charge of corporation tax will be abolished from April 2001. They are not directly connected with EU proposals on taxation of savings, on which subject I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer my hon. Friend the Paymaster General gave on 31 October 2000, Official Report, column 410W.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what his policy is concerning proposals by the Dutch Government for the harmonisation of pension tax systems, to be included in the IGC on institutional reform at Nice; [138734]

(2) if he will make a statement on proposals by the European Commission for the harmonisation of fuel taxes to be included at the IGC on institutional reform at Nice; [138733]

(3) if he will make a statement on plans by the French Presidency to introduce internal market tax harmonisation measures. [138729]

Mr. Timms: The Government will insist on retaining unanimity for decisions on taxation.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Civil Servants (Relocation)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which relocation companies hold contracts with his Department for the relocation of civil servants; when the contracts were last renewed; where the contracts were advertised; and what the length and value of each contract is. [137192]

Mr. Hain: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has no current contracts with specialist companies for staff relocation in the United Kingdom.

Dependent Territories Citizens

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what entitlement citizens of (a) Gibraltar and (b) Ceuta and Melilla have to benefits available to EU citizens; and if he will make a statement. [137379]

Mr. Vaz: The Treaty establishing the European Community applies to Gibraltar as a European Territory for whose external relations the UK as a member state is responsible, subject to various exemptions provided for in the UK's Act of Accession to the Community. Specifically, Gibraltar is not part of the Community Customs Territory and is outside the Treaty rules on the free movement of goods, the Common Commercial Policy, the VAT regime and the Common Agricultural and Fisheries Policies.

The EC Treaty applies to Ceuta and Melilla as part of the Spanish metropolitan territory, subject to certain exemptions contained in Spain's Act of Accession to the Community. Ceuta and Melilla are not part of the Community Customs Territory (although goods originating in Ceuta and Melilla have duty-free access to the EC) and are outside the Common Commercial Policy and Common Agricultural and Fisheries Policies. VAT is not levied there, but Spain contributes to Community own resources on their behalf.

Gibraltar and Ceuta and Melilla are entitled to the benefits flowing from the EC Treaty except those arising from parts of the Treaty and subsequent legislation which are not applicable to these territories.

Visa Applicants (Islamabad)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the current average waiting time in Islamabad is for applicants seeking leave to enter the United Kingdom having married United Kingdom citizens from the point of application to the issuing of the visa; and what it was on the same count date in each of the last five years. [137368]

Mr. Vaz: At the end of September waiting time in Islamabad for interview for a spouse settlement visa was 18.5 weeks. Waiting times at the same point in the last two years were 40 weeks (1999) and 16 weeks (1998). The monthly data for the years 1995 to 1997 have not been retained. The waiting times at the end of December 1995, 1996 and 1997 were 13.5 weeks (1995), 18 weeks (1996) and 18 weeks (1997). We also know from correspondence with the High Commission that the waiting time for spouse settlement interviews in September 1995 was 18 weeks. All these waiting times are for interview. The time until a decision to issue (or refuse) a visa may be longer, depending on the circumstances of the case. I have today asked Islamabad for weekly information about queue lengths.

Kazakhstan

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss the conclusions of the OSCE reports on the parliamentary and presidential elections in Kazakhstan in 1999, and the issue of freedom and independence of the media, with President Nazarbaev during his forthcoming visit. [137713]

Mr. Vaz: We welcome President Nazarbaev's visit to the United Kingdom from 15–18 November 2000. The Secretary of State will discuss progress on democratisation and media freedom with President Nazarbaev during his visit to the United Kingdom.

European Charter of Fundamental Rights

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what bearing the Charter of Fundamental Rights will have on verdicts of the European Court of Justice; and if he will make a statement. [137965]

Mr. Vaz: The EU is already obliged to respect fundamental rights, and the ECJ is responsible for ensuring that this happens. The obligation to respect fundamental rights was first given Treaty status at Maastricht. In deciding how to interpret fundamental rights the ECJ is already, and will remain, free to have regard to relevant material. That may include the Charter of Fundamental Rights.

The Charter will be adopted at Nice as a political declaration. It will not be legally binding. It will create no new powers or tasks for the EU or the ECJ. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 555W.

European Union Defence Policy

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the treaty base for the development in European Union defence policy in respect of (a) CFSP, (b) ESDI, (c) ESDP and (d) CESDP at (i) St. Malo, (ii) Cologne and (iii) Feira. [138209]

Mr. Vaz: The acronyms ESDI, ESDP and CESDP have all been used to refer to the same process: the European defence initiative launched by the Prime Minister at Portschach in 1998. This initiative has been taken forward through the St. Malo UK-French Summit and the European Councils of Cologne, Helsinki and Feira. The aims of the initiative remain the same: to strengthen the military capabilities of EU member states and European Allies and to enable the Council of the EU to decide to launch and to conduct a military crisis management operation (a Petersberg task) where the alliance as a whole is not engaged. ESDI more correctly refers to the arrangements within NATO for the alliance to support European-led crisis management.

Article 2 and Title V of the Treaty on European Union provide the legal base for the EU's CFSP activity, including military crisis management. The Government are satisfied that the Treaty provides a sufficient legal base for the European defence initiative as defined in successive decisions of the European Council.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the inclusion of defence matters in the proposed Treaty of Nice. [138208]

Mr. Vaz: The Government expect that the European Council at Nice will take decisions on the necessary arrangements to enable the Council of the European Union to decide to launch and to conduct a military crisis management operation (a Petersberg task) where the alliance as a whole is not engaged. The Government are satisfied that the existing Treaty provisions provide a sufficient legal base for the proposals which the French Presidency was mandated to develop by the European Council at Feira.

Iraq

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total list of holds imposed by the UK on humanitarian goods for Iraq on 1 November. [138457]

Mr. Hain: Over US$37 billion has been made available to purchase humanitarian goods under the Oil for Food programme since its inception in 1996. This year alone, Oil for Food revenue is expected to reach more than US$16 billion.

Figures for 1 November are no longer available. However, as at 13 November the UK had 208 contracts placed on hold, valued at approximately US$0.3 billion, which is less than 1 per cent. of the total value of Oil for Food revenue. The UK, as a responsible member of the UN Iraq Sanctions Committee, scrutinises contracts very carefully to ensure that goods are not supplied to Iraq in violation of Security Council resolutions. Holds are normally lifted after assurances have been received about the end-use or in-country monitoring of these goods. Since early October the UK has lifted holds on contracts valued at $200 million following confirmation that the goods will be subject to specific monitoring within Iraq.

It is noteworthy that at the end of October Iraq's bureaucracy was holding back the delivery of US$1.1 billion worth of goods already approved by the Sanctions Committee. Detailed information on the status of individual Oil for Food contracts are available from The Office for Iraq Programme's website (http://www.un.org/Dems/oip.html).

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the European Union's policy on sanctions against Iraq. [138682]

Mr. Hain: The member states of the European Union, in accordance with their international obligations, continue to implement the United Nations sanctions on Iraq imposed by the United Nations Security Council acting under Chapter VII of the UN Charter.

Euro

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the statistical accuracy of recent Eurobarometer opinion surveys concerning attitudes towards the euro. [138737]

Mr. Vaz: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office makes no assessment of the statistical accuracy of such polls. The European Commission produces the six-monthly Eurobarometer poll. For details of the surveys research methodology I refer the hon. Member to the office of the European Commission in London.

IGC

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on proposals by the French Presidency at the IGC on Institutional Reform relating to self-employed people. [138728]

Mr. Vaz: The Government have made it quite clear that it will insist on retaining unanimity for Social Security, including for the categories of people covered by the Social Security provisions.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on proposals from the French Presidency at the IGC on Institutional Reform to extend the coordination of national tax systems. [138730]

Mr. Vaz: The Government have made it quite clear that it will insist on retaining unanimity for decisions on taxation.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the proposals in the progress report on the IGC relating to the WTO and the conclusion of international trade agreements. [138726]

Mr. Vaz: The Presidency's proposals relate principally to the extension of the Common Commercial Policy to include services and intellectual property. This could bring benefits to British industry by improving access to overseas markets, and the Government is therefore looking carefully at the options for change.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the proposals for the co-ordination of social security systems contained in the progress report on the IGC on Institutional Reform. [138727]

Mr. Vaz: The Government have made quite clear that they will insist on retaining unanimity for social security.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on proposals in the Progress report on the IGC on Institutional Reform relating to (a) political parties at the European Union level, (b) the European Court of Justice, (c) the Court of Auditors, (d) the co-operation procedure and (e) the Committee of the Regions. [138722]

Mr. Vaz: On the first point, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for West Suffolk (Mr. Spring) on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 513W.

The Government have made clear its position on IGC issues in its White Paper, and most recently in the Government's response to the Foreign Affairs Committee report on the intergovernmental Conference (published as a Command Paper on Friday 27 October). I refer the hon. Member to these.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the proposals concerning enhanced cooperation in the Progress Report on the IGC on Institutional Reform, with particular reference to the impact on member states not taking part in enhanced cooperation. [138676]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 557W.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what his policy is on the number of votes to be required for a blocking minority under QMV at the proposed IGC on Institutional Reform; [138677]

(2) if he will make a statement on proposals for a double simple majority voting rule to be discussed at the IGC on Institutional Reform. [138678]

Mr. Vaz: The Government set out their position on vote reweighting in the IGC White Paper that they published in February.

I refer the hon. Member to this.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on proposals in the Progress report on the IGC on Institutional Reform relating to (a) transport issues and (b) economic and financial cooperation with non-EU countries. [138735]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 30 October 2000, Official Report, column 238W.

European Court of Justice

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has made to the Advocate-General of the European Court of Justice's recent legal opinion concerning criticism of the EU. [138684]

Mr. Vaz: In his Opinion in a case brought by Bernard Connelly against the European Commission, the Advocate-General, Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer, concluded that the European Court of Justice should dismiss Mr. Connelly's appeal against the decision of the Court of First Instance. The Court of First Instance had found previously that Mr. Connelly was in breach of his obligations as a Commission official, according to his terms of employment, and that his dismissal was therefore justified. Neither the Court of First Instance nor the Advocate-General found that it was illegal to criticise the EU, as it has been claimed in some sections of the press.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy towards (a) the number of British commissioners, (b) the number of votes allocated to Britain and (c) the number of British judges on the European Court of Justice. [138675]

Mr. Vaz: The Government set out their position on Commission size and vote reweighting in the IGC White Paper that they published in February. I refer the hon. Member to this.

Currently each member state nominates a judge for the ECJ. There are no plans to change this.

Acquis Communautaire

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the volume of acquis communautaire applicant states need to adopt before they can join the EU. [138723]

Mr. Vaz: As in all previous enlargements, new members of the EU must be able to implement the acquis communautaire in full on accession. The candidate country's acceptance of the acquis may give rise to technical adjustments, and exceptionally to non-permanent transitional measures. These adjustments and transitional measures are the subject of the accession negotiations currently under way with 12 countries (Bulgaria, Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Malta, Poland, Romania, Slovakia and Slovenia).

Ballistic Missile Defence Shield

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on American plans for a ballistic missile defence shield designed to protect Western Europe. [138683]

Mr. Vaz: President Clinton announced on 1 September that any decision on the possible deployment of a National Missile Defence system would be deferred to the next US Administration.

The system the current Administration envisage would protect all of the US, but not Western Europe.

French Presidency Proposals

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the French Presidency's proposals for (a) a European food safety authority and (b) the harmonisation of working hours in the transport industry. [138680]

Mr. Vaz: (a) A proposal for a European Food Authority forms one part of the European Commission's proposed Regulation on general food law adopted on 8 November. The UK supports the establishment of such an Authority and will be considering this proposal carefully with wide public consultation. The French Presidency will be seeking preliminary views on the European Food Authority proposal in an orientation debate at the Internal Market Council on 30 November.

(b) Proposals concerning the organisation of working time for mobile workers in the road transport sector were first published by the Commission in November 1998. Since then, negotiations in the Council have been slow and difficult and several issues have still to be resolved. The French Presidency hope to reach a Common Position at the Transport Council on 20–21 December.

Diego Garcia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action his Department is taking to assist former inhabitants of Diego Garcia to return to all parts of the islands. [138489]

Mr. Battle: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 511W.

HIV/AIDS

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to respond to the request from the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights for a report on the UK Government's activities concerning HIV/AIDS and human rights. [138561]

Mr. Hain: The HIV/AIDS pandemic is one of the most serious threats to health in modern times. Globally, nearly 34 million people live with HIV/AIDS. And, for many, it is not just their health that suffers but also their economic and social rights.

That is why we see HIV/AIDS as an absolute priority. We are intensifying our support for more effective national and regional action to tackle HIV/AIDS; increasing support for vaccine development and microbicides to prevent infection; and collaborating with national governments, the private sector, civil society, researchers, UNAIDS, UNICEF and WHO in ensuring the most effective global response to the pandemic.

In responding to the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights we shall of course highlight these and our other efforts. I expect to issue this response in the near future, once we, in conjunction with DFID, have compiled the necessary information.

Homosexual Rights

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to include reference to homosexual rights in the 'Good Governance and Human Rights' section of his Department's publication 'Focus International, Britain's Overseas Territories'. [138534]

Mr. Battle: Focus International briefings are occasional publications on topics in which Britain has a particular interest. The July 2000 briefing on Overseas Territories was produced in direct response to Overseas and UK public interest in the territories arising from the publication of the White Paper on Overseas Territories in March 1999. It included a reference to our requirement for Overseas Territories to revise legislation to decriminalise consensual homosexual acts in private between adults.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Gill: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will provide a schedule of the types of legal cases that are eligible for legal aid. [138272]

Mr. Lock: Public funding (formerly legal aid) is available, subject to eligibility criteria, for all civil cases in England and Wales unless specifically excluded by schedule 2 of the Access to Justice Act 1999. Legal aid is available for all criminal cases which are serious enough to meet the interests of justice criteria set out in section 22(2) of the Legal Aid Act 1988.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Domestic Violence

31. Mr. Rapson: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will make a statement on the policy adopted by the Crown Prosecution Service to ensure effective prosecution in cases of domestic violence. [137167]

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service regards violence in the domestic context as a serious matter and will prosecute wherever it is proper to do so.

It is committed to working with others in the criminal justice system to achieve effective prosecutions in this difficult area.

The Crown Prosecutors will consider the full range of prosecution options whether or not the victim is willing to attend the trial as a witness.

Crown Prosecution Service

32. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Solicitor-General what guidance he gives to the Crown Prosecution Service on consultation with victims on decisions about whether to prosecute. [137168]

The Solicitor-General: The Code for Crown Prosecutors was reissued last month. It sets out among other things the relationship between the CPS, victims and the public interest. The Code explains that the CPS prosecutes on behalf of the public at large and not just in the interests of any one individual.

The Code at paragraphs 6.7 and 6.8 makes it clear that Crown Prosecutors should always take into account the consequences for the victim of the decision whether or not to prosecute, and any views expressed by the victim or the victim's family as that is part of the public interest.

Prosecutors should already carry this out in appropriate cases, but additional guidance is being considered to improve this process.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will make a statement on the impact of the Human Rights Act 1998 on the operation of the Crown Prosecution Service. [137165]

The Solicitor-General: The significance of the Human Rights Act on the work of the CPS was recognised at an early stage, and a high priority was given to ensure the CPS was well prepared for the implementation of the Act on 2 October 2000.

In consultation with other prosecuting agencies and leading external human rights experts, the CPS developed a comprehensive training course for CPS prosecutors. The training programme reached nearly 2,500 prosecutors and selected caseworkers before 2 October 2000.

This training programme and the continued guidance and advice that CPS staff receive has ensured that cases giving rise to human rights issues have been dealt with in a professional and effective manner. We had expected that human rights problems would be raised in ordinary cases, and that they would be dealt with in the ordinary way. This has proved to be the case.

The Human Rights Act has meant that the courts are considering many new arguments. A number of cases raising human rights points are already going to the appeal courts. Where such cases have an impact on the criminal justice system as a whole and need to be litigated and resolved urgently they may be fast tracked to the appeal courts.

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Solicitor-General what arrangements he has put in place for reviewing the work of the CPS Inspectorate; and how he measures the effectiveness of the Inspectorate. [137161]

The Solicitor-General: My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General and I routinely meet the Chief Inspector to discuss the work of the Inspectorate and the issues emerging. We receive and consider the Annual Report of the Chief Inspector together with reports of each Area inspection and thematic review undertaken. An Advisory Board is at present being established to ensure that the Inspectorate activity is targeted on those matters which most influence the performance of the CPS itself and the efficiency and effectiveness of the criminal justice system as a whole.

Criminal Libel

33. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Solicitor-General what impact incorporation of the European convention on Human Rights into UK law has had on his policy on permitting prosecutions for criminal libel; and if he will make a statement. [137169]

The Solicitor-General: CPS prosecution policy is contained in the Code for Crown Prosecutors. The Code outlines the two-stage process in the decision to prosecute. The first stage is the evidential test, which states there must be sufficient evidence to provide a "realistic prospect of conviction". The second stage is the public interest test. The CPS will only start or continue when the case has passed both tests. The Code also states that each case must be considered on its own facts and merits.

The revised Code, which was launched on 11 October 2000, has been amended to reflect the introduction of the Human Rights Act 1998. The Code states

> Crown Prosecutors must apply the principles of the European Convention on Human Rights in accordance with the Act.

Cases involving criminal libel will be considered in accordance with the principles outlined in the Code.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Scotland) Bill

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Solicitor-General when he notified the Presiding Officer of the Scottish Parliament that he did not intend to refer the Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Scotland) Bill to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. [138278]

The Solicitor-General: An official in the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers wrote to the Presiding Officer of the Scottish Parliament on 22 September 2000 to notify him that I did not intend to refer the Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Scotland) Bill to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council under section 33(1) of the Scotland Act 1998.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Dome

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of National Lottery grants has been spent on the Dome during 2000 to date. [135577]

Janet Anderson: Between 1 January 2000 and 31 October 2000, £139 million of Lottery money was paid to the New Millennium Experience Company. This amounts to 10.4 per cent. of the £1,340.5 million which has been paid to all grant recipients during the same period.

Lottery Funding (The Olympics)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the effect of National Lottery funding on Britain's Olympic performance. [134822]

Kate Hoey: The performance of the British Team in Sydney was the best showing since the 1920 Games. This was achieved through the focus, determination and talent of our athletes, harnessed and given a chance by the Lottery funding and other support that they and their coaches receive. Over £80 million has been paid to athletes and their sports from the National Lottery since 1997.

I have met with the Performance Directors of the Olympic Sports, together with the British Olympic Association, to discuss ways of building on the success of Sydney and I shall shortly be having a similar meeting with the Chief Executives of the sports governing bodies.

Fitness Industry

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the economic contribution of the fitness industry, consisting of private health and fitness clubs, public sports and leisure facilities, to the economy. [137044]

Kate Hoey: The Government recognise the contribution that the fitness industry makes to the overall economy and the wider health benefits of increasing participation. There are a number of different independent estimates of the specific economic benefits of the fitness and leisure industry based on estimates of the economic benefits of sport as a whole. However, these estimates tend not to be sensitive enough to give a reliable estimate of expenditure within specific sectors. I understand the Leisure Industries Research Centre at Sheffield Hallam University is currently developing a new model which aims to provide a more accurate picture of the economic impacts of different sectors of sport, including the health and fitness markets. Sheffield Hallam University is intending to publish the first results from this work shortly.

Free Television Licences (Scotland)

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many applications for free television licences for pensioners aged 75 years and over have been (a) made and (b) granted in (i) Glasgow, Pollok, (ii) the city of Glasgow and (iii) Scotland; and what each figure represents as a percentage of the eligible groups in each case. [137770]

Janet Anderson: The information requested is not available. TV Licensing, which administers this concession for the BBC as Licensing Authority, is not able to provide geographical breakdowns of the number of applications received and free licences issued. Television licences cover households rather than individuals and there is no accurate information, by area, on the number of households eligible for the concession. However, estimates of the over-75 population based on the 1991 Census indicate that there were approximately 5,200 people aged 75 or over in the Glasgow, Pollok constituency, 47,500 in the City of Glasgow and 327,000 in Scotland.

Athletics Stadium

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what his latest estimate is of the total cost of building an athletics stadium and related development at Picketts Lock. [137839]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 10 November 2000]: The English Sports Council has allocated £1.3 million from the Sports Lottery Fund for detailed feasibility work on the Lee Valley Stadium project. Accurate estimates of the overall project costs will be available once this work has been completed. An initial technical study for a concept athletics stadium capable of hosting the 2005 World Athletics Championships and becoming the long-term home for the athletics in the UK, has been prepared by Drivers Jonas, on behalf of the Lee Valley Regional Park Authority and UK Athletics. This paper exercise suggests that the cost of such a stadium could be around £95 million, but more accurate figures will be available in due course from the detailed feasibility study.

Digital Broadcasting

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if, following receipt of the BBC's consultation paper 'A Digital Curriculum', he will undertake a public consultation on its proposals; and what criteria he will adopt in deciding whether to give his approval to the BBC's proposals. [138550]

Janet Anderson: The BBC has recently carried out a public consultation on its proposed digital curriculum service. If, in the light of the consultation exercise, the Corporation decides that it wishes to proceed with such a service, my right hon. Friend's approval will be required. The Department would at that stage publish the BBC's request and invite representations. Details of the Department's consultation and the criteria we will use in assessing BBC public service proposals are set out in the guidelines "BBC Public Services: Approvals", copies of which were placed in the Library of the House on 21 June. The guidelines are currently being revised and we aim to publish the final version shortly.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the non-departmental public bodies responsible to him which have duties relating to Scotland, indicating their budget and staffing in Scotland, the number of Scottish board members and their emoluments. [137698]

Mr. Chris Smith: Non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department with statutory duties relating to Scotland are:

Advisory Committee on Historic Wreck Sites
British Library
British Tourist Authority
Broadcasting Standards Commission
Millennium Commission
National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts
National Heritage Memorial Fund
National Lottery Charities Board
National Lottery Commission
New Millennium Experience Company
New Opportunities Fund
Registrar of Public Lending Right
Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art
Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts
Theatres Trust
UK Sports Council

The remaining information is not held centrally in the form requested, but general information on expenditure, staffing, board members and levels of remuneration is published annually in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies". Copies of the "Public Bodies 1999" have been placed in the Libraries of the House and "Public Bodies 2000" is due to be published next month. Information on board membership and remuneration can also be downloaded from the Cabinet Office Public Appointments Directory website www.cabinet-office.gov.uk.

NORTHERN IRELAND

New Deal for Young People

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many people are employed in his Department under the New Deal for Young People; [136480]

(2) how many staff are employed by his Department under the New Deal for Young People. [137963]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary for the Cabinet Office in his answer on 13 October 2000, Official Report, column 551W.

Saville Inquiry

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total cost from 30 June to 30 September of the Saville Inquiry into the events in Londonderry on 30 January 1972; and what sums were spent in that period on the inquiry broken down by (a) salaries of staff, (b) travel and subsistence, (c) accommodation, (d) hearing/witness costs, (e) fees to solicitors, representing those killed, (f) solicitors representing others, (g) barristers representing those killed, (h) barristers representing others, (i) IT/communications and (j) miscellaneous, including general office expenditure and also provide the totals of each heading and the total costs since this inquiry began. [136556]

Mr. Ingram: My Department's expenditure on the Bloody Sunday Inquiry is summarised in the table for the period 1 July to 30 September 2000. The figures for moneys paid to solicitors and barristers cannot be readily provided separately, nor can the payments for their professional services be separated from other expenses. However these payments have been split between those to lawyers representing families and those to other lawyers, including Counsel to the Inquiry.

	Spend for period 1 July to 30 September 2000	Spend since 1997–98 to 30 September 2000
Salaries	290,676	2,069,659
Travel and subsistence	92,743	538,391
Accommodation	174,696	1,937,631
Hearing/Witness Costs	208,142	1,462,955
Payments to lawyers representing families of the dead or wounded	1,118,711	4,170,791
Payments to other lawyers, including Counsel to the Inquiry	291,368	11,149,614
IT/Communications	1,555,032	7,064,818
Miscellaneous including general office expenditure	84,959	1,177,659
Total	3,816,327	29,571,518

WALES

Reservoirs (Wales)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of water was held in reservoirs in Wales immediately prior to the heavy rainfall in the second half of October. [138562]

Mr. Paul Murphy: That is an operational matter for the Environment Agency and water supply companies. I understand that the Environment Agency Wales will be producing a report on recent flooding in Wales for the National Assembly for Wales and this will include information on reservoir levels.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Poultry Farming

12. Mr. McCabe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with poultry farmers concerning the integrated pollution prevention and control directive. [137145]

Mr. Morley: My ministerial colleagues in MAFF have discussed IPPC issues with representatives of the poultry sector as part of our regular discussions on the situation in the industry. Also my officials regularly meet the poultry industry and the Environment Agency to discuss the implementation of the Directive.

Climate Change

13. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what strategic measures he is taking to allow for agricultural changes induced by climate change. [137146]

Mr. Morley: My Department has carried out a detailed analysis of the likely impact of climate change on agriculture. Results are not conclusive but the recent extreme weather means that we must assess long-term affect carefully. Further research is underway.

BSE

15. Mr. Andy King: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that scientific advice to Ministers relating to BSE is published. [137148]

Ms Quin: Scientific advice to Ministers relating to BSE is provided by SEAC. Public Summaries of the Committee's deliberations including advice and recommendations to Ministers are published after every meeting and placed on the MAFF and DH websites.

21. Mr. Crausby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent assessment he has made of the potential incidence of BSE in sheep. [137154]

Ms Quin: BSE has not been found in sheep except under experimental circumstances. Research has shown that in sheep BSE is similar to scrapie, the transmissible spongiform encephalopathy that has been present in British sheep for hundreds of years. MAFF is currently funding experiments to examine some 235 cases of scrapie for evidence of infection with the agent of BSE.

23. Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to improve communication and co-ordination between his Department and other Government Departments and agencies on issues relating to BSE. [137157]

Ms Quin: MAFF works closely with other Government Departments and agencies on BSE issues. Departments and agencies meet monthly to review BSE issues. Separate meetings are held as necessary on specific topics.

Common Fisheries Policy

16. Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what wildlife conservation measures he is proposing in connection with the review of the common fisheries policy. [137149]

Mr. Morley: We believe that it is important to continue to integrate environmental considerations into fisheries management. The Commission have already indicated that reduction in the bycatch of cetaceans is a priority.

Livestock Farming (Northumberland)

17. Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the prospects for livestock farming in Northumberland. [137150]

Ms Quin: The Government announced in September 1999 and March 2000 substantial aid to the livestock industry—on top of the £1 billion in normal subsidy payments made to UK livestock producers each year.

£1.6 billion over seven years will also be made available under the England Rural Development Programme and with natural advantages such as an abundance of grass, good breeding stock and a wealth of technical expertise at their disposal, the Government believe livestock farmers—including those in Northumberland—should have a successful future.

Countryside Stewardship Scheme

18. Mr. Hope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to increase the area of farmed land subject to countryside stewardship agreements. [137151]

Mr. Morley: My right hon. Friend the Minister announced a substantial increase in the Countryside Stewardship budget last December. As part of the England Rural Development Programme (ERDP), £500 million is being allocated to the Scheme over the next seven years. During this period, MAFF aims to add 525,000 hectares of land to the 210,000 hectares already covered by the Scheme.

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to increase expenditure on the Countryside Stewardship scheme. [137131]

Mr. Morley: Our plans for a major expansion of the Stewardship budget are well known. As part of the England Rural Development Programme, £500 million is being allocated to the Countryside Stewardship Scheme over the next seven years to 2006–07. This means that there will be around £16 million available each year for new agreements and we will be able to offer more than double the number of agreements offered in previous years.

Organic Farming

19. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what help his Department provides to farmers seeking to convert to organic production. [137152]

Mr. Morley: The Organic Farming Scheme provides conversion aid over a five year period to farmers in England. The budget for the Scheme for the period 1999–2000 to 2006–07 is some £140 million.

In addition, the Organic Conversion Information Service (OCIS) funded by MAFF provides free advice to potential organic farmers.

Ms Drown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many successful applications have been made to the organic farming scheme since May 1997; and how many were made in the previous five years. [137147]

Mr. Morley: Aid for conversion to organic farming has been provided since 1994, first under the Organic Aid Scheme and from April 1999 under the Organic Farming Scheme. There were 158 successful aid applications prior to April 1997 and 1,567 successful applications since that date.

Arable Farming

20. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what forecasts he has made for the economic prospects of the arable sector over the coming year. [137153]

Ms Quin: Forecasts of farm incomes in the United Kingdom, for the year ending February 2001, including incomes on cereals farms and general cropping farms, will be published at the end of January 2001. More detailed information will be available in the next edition of "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom" which will be published in March 2001. There is no doubt, however, that UK arable farmers face very difficult trading conditions which is why my right hon. Friend the Minister has announced that a further £34 million in agrimonetary compensation is to be paid to arable farmers, subject to European Commission approval. The extra money will provide valuable assistance to the arable sector at an exceptionally difficult time.

Supermarkets

24. Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with supermarkets about their relationships with suppliers of horticultural products. [137158]

Ms Quin: Supply chain relationships are a theme of the Agricultural Forum, where Ministers meet key figures from all points in the food chain including retailers and horticultural producers, among others. The Forum last met on 6 July and will meet again on 23 November, when the food chain will be one of the key issues on the agenda.

As part of the Government's Action Plan for Farming, the major retailers, facilitated by the IGD, have developed a voluntary code of best practice in commercial relationships with trading partners. The Competition Commission has also recommended that a Code of Practice should be established which would put relations between supermarkets and their suppliers on a clearer and more predictable basis. Supermarkets with more than 8 per cent. of the market would have to give legally binding undertakings to comply with the Code. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has asked the Director-General of Fair Trading to take this forward.

Illegal Fishing

25. Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to combat the illegal landing of fish in the UK. [137159]

Mr. Morley: The Fisheries Departments in the UK spend over £24 million a year on monitoring, control and surveillance. A number of steps have been taken to strengthen enforcement including the introduction of satellite monitoring, prior notification of landings and designated port arrangements for larger vessels and the implementation of more rigorous controls over the landing and sale of fish agreed by the Council of Ministers in 1998.

Flooding (River Roding)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's response to the flooding of the River Roding. [137155]

Mr. Morley: I visited the area on 1 November and sympathise greatly with all those affected. In common with elsewhere in the Country, the Environment Agency issued timely flood warnings and co-operated with the emergency services and local authorities, in this case the London Borough of Redbridge, to provide all possible assistance. The Agency has been asked to report on the flooding throughout the Country once the immediate effects of the flooding have been dealt with.

Agricultural Wages Board

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effect the Agricultural Wages Board has had on current rates of pay in the horticulture sector. [137133]

Ms Quin: The Agriculture Wages Board last increased minimum rates of pay for full time standard and casual workers, including those in the horticulture sector, in June of this year. The Government also announced that the Agriculture Wages Board would continue to operate for at least another five years.

Rural Development Plan

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what role the North West Regional Development Agency is playing in the implementation of the Rural Development Plan for England. [137156]

Mr. Morley: The North West Regional Development Agency is a member of the England Rural Development Programme (ERDP) Regional Programming Group (RPG) for the North West. RPGs for each region have a strategic role in guiding the implementation of the regionally targeted schemes in accordance with the aspiration and goals in the Regional Chapters of the ERDP.

Advisory Bodies

Tony Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the (a) task forces, (b) action teams, (c) policy reviews and (d) other temporary advisory bodies with external members currently in existence within his Department; and on what date each body (i) was set up and (ii) is expected to terminate. [131460]

Mr. Morley: I refer to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Cabinet Office on 27 July 2000, Official Report, column 799W.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list each group that is responsible to his Department, with significant and plural membership from outside the Civil Service, and to which the Nolan rules on non-departmental public bodies do not apply; and for each such group if it (a) is a private company, (b) is a charity, (c) has no formal legal basis and (d) has some other legal basis, giving details; [131173]

(2) if he will list the reports submitted to his Department, by bodies that were created after May 1997 and that include significant and plural membership from outside the Civil Service, stating in each case the body writing the report, the date the report was submitted, how many recommendations were made, the number of those recommendations that have been implemented to date and the number of recommendations that have been rejected; and if he will make a statement. [133571]

Mr. Morley: [holding answer 18 July 2000]: I refer to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Cabinet Office, 27 July 2000, Official Report, column 799W.

I also refer the hon. Member to the first central list of information that was published on 11 January 2000. Copies of the list are available in the Libraries of the House.

The detailed information requested about the number of recommendations made and the number rejected is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate costs.

Organic Imports

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks are made on imported foods labelled as organic to ensure that they do not include residues which would not be allowed in UK-produced organic foods. [135673]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 31 October 2000]: The authentication of organic foods is achieved on the basis of production standards rather than residues checks. Under Regulation (EEC) 2092/91 all food produced within the EU for sale as organic must comply with the production requirements of the Regulation and be produced by an operator certified by a recognised organic certification body and subject to annual inspection by them.

In the case of imports from outside the EU, the European Commission has listed six countries which have demonstrated to the Commission that they have equivalent standards and controls: Argentina, Australia, Czech Republic, Hungary, Israel and Switzerland. Imports may take place freely, although the imports must be registered with an organic certification body. For other countries outside the EU, registered EU importers may make application to the authorities in their member state providing full details of the standards and control procedures to be used. An authorisation to import will be issued only if it can be shown that these are equivalent to the EC Regulation. The UK Register of Organic Food Standards (UKROFS) is the body that undertakes the issue of such authorisations in the UK.

Civil Servants (Relocation)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 17 May 2000, Official Report, column 176W, on relocating civil servants, which relocation companies hold contracts with his Department for the relocation of civil servants; when these contracts were last renewed; where the contracts were advertised; and what the length and value is of each contract. [137095]

Mr. Morley: No relocation companies hold contracts with my Department. Contractors are invited to tender on an ad-hoc basis when the need arises.

Flooding (Insurance)

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make funds available to local authorities to compensate individuals whose homes have been flooded but who were not insured. [138687]

Mr. Morley: On 4 November the Government announced significant improvements to the Bellwin Scheme to assist local authorities in dealing with the current flooding. However, such help does not extend to individuals or businesses affected by flooding as it is an insurable risk.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many certificates issued by the Compensation Recovery Unit have resulted in payments received; and what is the total of those payments; [136432]

(2) how much money has been recovered from damages awarded to miners by the Compensation Recovery Unit; [136433]

(3) what was the original estimated amount claimed by the Compensation Recovery Unit from the damages awarded to those miners whose cases the hon. Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney brought to his and his Department's attention; and what is the latest estimate claimed by the Compensation Recovery Unit in these cases. [136431]

Mr. Bayley: Since the current compensation recovery scheme came into effect during the 1996–97 financial year, 3,898,582 certificates have been issued, and £684,430,905 has been recovered.

The total amount recovered to date by the Compensation Recovery Unit from damages awarded to miners by the Department of Trade and Industry is £14,868,340.07.

The breakdown of the certificates issued and amounts recovered

Financial year	Certificates issued	Benefits recovered (£)
1997–98	720,546	166,906,114
1998–99	1,265,104	201,468,600
1999–2000	1,232,304	202,105,188
1 April 2000 to 31 August 2000	680,628	113,951,003
Total	3,898,582	684,430,905

It should be noted that, first, more than one certificate may be issued in relation to a given recovery, and, second, because payments may be received some time after the Compensation Recovery Unit issues a certificate, payments received during a given financial year may relate to certificates issued during the previous financial year. The figures for certificates issued and benefits recovered are therefore not necessarily coterminous. In respect of the five cases brought by my hon. Friend to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the Department in February of this year, both the original estimated amount and the latest estimated amount are shown in the following table. For reasons of confidentiality, the identity of particular cases has to remain anonymous.

Cases	Original certificate (£)	Date of issue	Latest certificate (£)	Date of issue
1	21,787.59	8 January 2000	0	27 October 1999
2	21,707.54	16 November 1999	6.38	18 October 2000
3	24,238.75	24 July 1997	22.02	2 October 2000
4	14,302.01	21 December 1999	413.08	6 June 2000
5	5,858.35	27 October 1999	674.46	8 August 2000

Ministerial Directions

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer from the Chief Secretary to the Treasury of 23 October 2000, Official Report, columns 73–76W, on ministerial directions, if he will place in the Library the text and supporting documentation of the directions made by Ministers in his Department in 1998 and 1999; and if he will make a statement. [137295]

Mr. Rooker: In accordance with the rules of Government accounting, the Comptroller and Auditor General has been notified of all ministerial directions.

We have considered this request under the terms of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information and concluded that providing this information would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion within Government. The request therefore falls within the terms of exemption 2 of the Code of Practice.

Benefit Fraud Inspectorate

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the local authorities in Scotland which have been inspected by the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate, together with the dates when (a) these inspections began and (b) reports were issued. [137775]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Local authority	Start date	Publication date
East Dunbartonshire	19 January 1998	18 March 1999
Inverclyde	4 May 1998	12 February 1999
East Lothian	18 May 1998	18 March 1999
South Ayrshire	6 July 1998	18 March 1999
Dundee	2 November 1998	1 July 1999
Angus	28 June 1999	16 May 2000
Borders	5 July 1999	22 June 2000
Stirling	30 August 1999	22 June 2000
Edinburgh	30 November 1999	2 November 2000

Notes:

1. The start date shown is when the local authority is contacted with a request for information to assist with future planning of the inspection. The inspection start dates for inspections begun earlier than 1999 have been calculated as records did not hold actual start dates.

2. The current Benefit Fraud Inspectorate programme includes another two Scottish local authorities which are currently being inspected and a further four inspections of Scottish authorities that are due to be carried out by autumn 2001.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those reports by the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate which have had sections completely blanked out. [137726]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 10 November 2000]: The information is in the list, which gives all the reports that have been published so far by the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate, where a paragraph or more has been blanked out.

It should be noted that when the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate publishes reports it blanks out material which would be of assistance to fraudsters, unnecessarily identifies individuals, or is confidential. All reports so far have had some material blanked out, except the Securing Child Support (Child Support Agency) report published in July 1999.

Agency Reports

Vaccine Damage Payment Act

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes have been made in the rules for eligibility for payments under the Vaccine Damage Payment Act 1979 in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [137776]

Mr. Bayley: The Vaccine Damage Payment (VDP) Act 1979 provides a single, tax-free payment for people who have suffered severe mental and/or physical disablement of 80 per cent. or more as a result of vaccination against one or a group of specified diseases following a claim made within six years of the date of vaccination or of a child reaching the age of two whichever is the later. The only changes to the eligibility rules which have been made since 1979 are the addition of mumps in April 1990 and haemophilus influenza type b (Hib) in May 1995 to the list of specified diseases.

On 27 June 2000, Official Report, columns 719–20, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced a number of changes to the VDP scheme. In addition to increasing the level of the one-off payment for £40,000 to £100,000, these changes included proposals to amend the time limits for claiming a payment to age 21 in the case of children, and to reduce the disability threshold from 80 per cent. to 60 per cent.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further plans he has to increase the take-up of the minimum income guarantee. [135755]

Mr. Rooker: We are determined to ensure that pensioners on low incomes claim what they are entitled to. The minimum income guarantee take-up campaign is still in progress.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners he estimates are (a) eligible for and (b) claiming the Minimum Income Guarantee for each parliamentary constituency in Wales. [136646]

Mr. Rooker: It is only possible to answer part (b) of the hon. Member's question.

Income Support Statistics Quarterly Enquiry, May 2000

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South (Mr. Donohoe) of 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 573W, if he will list the percentage of each five year age group above the age of 60 years who are in receipt of the Minimum Income Guarantee, broken down by gender. [137387]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 9 November 2000]: The information is in the table.

Minimum Income Guarantee pensioners aged 60 or over by age, gender and as a percentage of the population in the relevant age group, Great Britain, May 2000

Age	Number (Thousand)	Percentage
All claimants	1,615	13.6

80 or over	517	33.3

[1] 60–64 age band includes claimants aged under 60 where there is a partner aged 60 or over.

Notes:

1. Figures are based on 5 per cent. sample, therefore subject to sampling error.
2. Figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.
3. Pensioners are defined as where the claimant, and/or partner are aged 60 or over.
4. "Percentage of the population" is based on ONS population estimates for mid-term 1999, and represents Income Support claimants in each age band as a proportion of the population of the same age and gender.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement regarding the level of complexity of the form that needs to be completed by pensioners wishing to claim the Minimum Income Guarantee and its impact on the numbers of people making a claim. [137617]

Mr. Rooker: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security has said in his statement on 9 November 2000, Official Report, columns 451–55, the Department is examining measures which will reduce the complexity of the current system and encourage pensioners to claim their correct benefit entitlement.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a geographical breakdown of the number of pensioners who are estimated to be entitled to the Minimum Income Guarantee but do not claim it. [138311]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the rate of Minimum Income Guarantee per week from April 2001. [138432]

Mr. Rooker: In April 2001, the Minimum Income Guarantee will be set at £92.15 for single pensioners and £140.55 for couples.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate, making no allowance for behavioural change, of how many pensioner households will benefit from the Minimum Income Guarantee in 2050. [138349]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 15 November 2000]: Making no allowance for behavioural change, the figure remains at one in four—the same as given in the Pensions Green Paper "Partnership in Pensions" (Cm 4179).

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many retired people who qualify for payment of the Minimum Income Guarantee are receiving it. [138522]

Mr. Rooker: Some 2 million pensioners either as singles or couples receive the Minimum Income Guarantee. Figures for those who might be entitled but are not claiming were based on a 1 per cent. sample. We shall have a better estimate of those entitled but not claiming when the present take-up campaign is concluded, during which we are making direct contact with 2.3 million pensioners.

"Voices"

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department spent on advertising space in the recent Government publication, "Voices". [135584]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 30 October 2000]: The total cost of advertising space was £5,477.85 including VAT. In addition we spent £1,395.90 on design and production.

"Voices" magazine represents a good opportunity for us to make women aware of information available on a number of issues that may affect them. The pack that women are sent when they respond to the advert contains information about: pension options; changes to the state pension age and Inherited SERPS; help available for new mothers and support in times of bereavement.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the income ratio is between the top fifth and the bottom fifth of pensioners; and what it would be if the link between the basic pension and average earnings had been retained. [136046]

Mr. Rooker: In 1998–99, the ratio of average (median) incomes in the top fifth compared to the bottom fifth of the pensioners' income distribution was 3.1 for single pensioners and 3.5 for pensioner couples. The other information requested is not available.

Notes:

1. pensioners are defined as single people aged over state pension age (65 for men, 60 for women) and couples (married or cohabiting) where the man is over state pension age.

2. Income is defined as net income before housing costs. The income distribution has been calculated separately for single pensioners and pensioner couples.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 8 February 2000, Official Report, column 122–29W, on pensioner incomes, if he will provide estimates on the same basis for 1998–99. [138030]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the tables.

Pensioner units' median gross income excluding means-tested benefits, by age and an marital status, 1998–99

Marital Status	60–64	65–69	70–74	75–79	Age 80+
Single male pensioners	n/a	133	124	114	112
Single female pensioners	123	114	102	100	99
Pensioner couples	n/a	268	233	192	182

Notes:

1. All amounts are in £ per week at July 1998 prices. They are rounded to the nearest £1, although estimates are not necessarily accurate to this level.

2. Estimates are for pensioner units. A pensioner unit is defined as a single (non-cohabiting) person over state pension age (65 years or above for men and 60 years or above for women), or a couple (married or cohabiting) where the man, defined as the head, is over state pension age. Estimates for pensioner couples are broken down by the age of the man.

3. Estimates marked 'n/a' are not applicable. Single men and couples are only defined as pensioner units if the man is aged 65 years or above.

4. Means-tested benefits are defined as Income Support, Family Credit, Council Tax Benefit, Housing Benefit and Social Fund Grants.

5. Levels of means-tested benefit may be particularly affected by mis-reporting by survey respondents, as it is thought that receipt of State Retirement Pension and receipt of Income Support are often confused in the FRS.

Notes:

1. Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample and are therefore subject to a degree of sampling error.
2. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.
3. As inquiries are taken at a point in time, no account can be taken of claimants who flow on and then off again, and visa versa, between the dates of the inquiry. Therefore, the numbers will underestimate the true level of inflows and outflows although the net combined effect will be correct.

Payroll Administration

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the costs of administering the payroll in his Department and associated agencies in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [135995]

Mr. Rooker: [holding answer 1 November 2000]: The annual cost of administering the Department's integrated pay, personnel and expenses system was £8.3 million 1999–2000. This will reduce to £4.9 million per annum from January 2001 due to restructuring of payroll and expenses services as part of the Department drive to refocus resources on the front-line services.

NIRS2

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what the level of the average payment made to date is to pensioners to make up for income lost as a result of the NIRS2 computer problems, broken down into (a) outstanding benefit payments and (b) compensation; [137516]

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that pensioners who may have received a lower income than they are entitled to as a result of the NIRS2 computer problems are informed of their correct entitlement; [137514]

(3) which benefits, apart from state pensions, are still affected by the problems with NIRS2; and how many claimants of each benefit are still awaiting their correct benefit entitlement as a result. [137515]

Mr. Rooker: The contract for NIRS2 was signed in 1996 and there have been problems with the system from the start, which we are trying to resolve.

Pensioners who have been affected by the NIRS2 problems and who are entitled to compensation under the Departmental Special Payments Scheme receive an average amount of arrears of £377 and an average amount of compensation of £11.77.

To receive compensation under the scheme, all the following conditions must be satisfied. These are that the:

final rate of pension was put into payment more than eight months after the date from which the pension is payable,

amount of arrears due is at least £100, amount of compensation payable is at least £10.

Any change to a pensioner's National Insurance account that affects the rate of pension in payment is notified automatically to the Benefit Agency. This allows both the new rate and any arrears of pension to be paid.

Claims for Widows Benefit, Ineapacity Benefit and Jobseeker's Allowance are also affected by the NIRS2 problems. At 15 September 200, Benefits Agency offices had 12,402 Incapacity Benefit claims waiting to be reviewed and 2,255 Jobseeker's Allowance claims. The exact number of Widows Benefit claims waiting to be reviewed is not known but the combined total of Widows Benefit and Retirement Pension claims outstanding at 15 September was 96,776.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will estimate the number of pensioners who are currently receiving incorrect payments in respect of (a) the state retirement pension and (b) SERPS that have been caused by problems with the NIRS2 computer system; [138250]

(2) if he will estimate the average number of newly entitled pensioners who are receiving incorrect payments in respect of (a) the state retirement pension and (b) SERPS that are caused by problems with the NIRS2 computer system; [138251]

(3) if he will estimate the average weekly (a) underpayment and (b) overpayment in respect of (i) the state retirement pension and (ii) SERPS caused by problems with the NIRS2 computer system at the latest date for which figures are available. [138252]

Mr. Rooker: The contract for NIRS2 was signed in 1996 and there have been problems with the system from the start which we are trying to resolve.

The number of pensioners not receiving their full rate of pension and the number of newly entitled pensioners who do not receive their full rate of pension in time for their first pension pay day specifically because of NIRS2 problems is not available.

Separate figures are not held for SERPS, which is a component of the overall State Retirement Pension. At 30 September 2000, NIRS2 problems had caused 128,000 pensioners to be underpaid a total of £43.5 million. At 31 August 2000, NIRS2 problems had caused 5,300 pensioners to be overpaid a total of £920,000. The average underpayment is £340 and the average overpayment £174.

Widowers

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the implications of the Crossland case for the claims of widowers for equality of treatment. [138316]

Angela Eagle: The ECHR case of Christopher Crossland, which was resolved by friendly settlement, concerned only the Widows Bereavement (Tax) Allowance, and therefore has no implications for Widows Benefits.

In introducing Bereavement Benefits from 9 April 2001, we will, for the first time, introduce specific benefits for widowers on the death of their spouse. These benefits will be available equally to men and women.

Fathers who are widowed before these benefits are introduced will be able to claim Widowed Parent's Allowance from 9 April 2001 as long as they satisfy the qualifying conditions.

State Pensions Liabilities (EU)

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on EU and British state pensions liabilities. [138736]

Mr. Rooker: UK state pension liabilities are a matter for the UK Government. EU state pension liabilities are a matter for the individual member states.

Pension Credit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has for the body that will administer the pension credit to share data relevant to the pension credit with (a) the Benefits Agency, (b) local authorities, (c) banks and building societies, (d) pension providers and (e) the Inland Revenue; [138505]

(2) what plans the Inland Revenue has for data-sharing with local authorities and the Benefits Agency on the pension credit. [138502]

Mr. Rooker: We will consider carefully administration issues as part of our detailed programme to take forward the pension credit. As part of this, we will endeavour to reduce barriers to the claims process.

SCOTLAND

Graduate Unemployment

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many, and what percentage of, first degree full-time graduates from higher education institutions in Scotland were unemployed six months after graduation in the last year for which figures are available. [137777]

Dr. Reid: Higher Education in Scotland is a devolved matter.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Field: To ask the President of the Council how many questions have been (a) tabled by the right hon. Member for Birkenhead since 23 October and (b) given holding answers. [138503]

Mrs. Beckett: The following information has been provided by the House of Commons Library (POLIS database) and covers the period from 23 October to 14 November:

(a) Questions tabled: 51

(b) Questions which have received a holding reply: 1

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

EU Employment Directive

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Council how many letters have been received by the Government alleging that there was a threat to religious freedom posed by the EU directive on employment agreed between the Governments of the EU on 17 October. [135064]

Mrs. Beckett: My Department has received no such letters.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply my right hon. Friend the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities gave on 6 November 2000, Official Report, column 39W.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Non-departmental Public Bodies (Scotland)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the non-departmental public bodies responsible to him which have duties relating to Scotland, indicating their budget and staffing in Scotland, the number of Scottish board members and their emoluments. [137695]

Mr. Morley: A list of the non-departmental public bodies that are sponsored by my Department and which have a remit covering Great Britain or the United Kingdom is set out in the following annexe.

The remaining information is not held centrally in the form requested but general information on expenditure, staffing, board members and levels of remuneration is published annually in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies". Copies of "Public Bodies 1999" have been placed in the Libraries of the House and "Public Bodies 2000" is due to be published next month. Information on board membership and remuneration can also be downloaded from the Cabinet Office Public Appointments Directory website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk).

Flood Defences

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to make available extra moneys for river dredging flood defence works in East Sussex. [137545]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 14 November 2000]: Additional funding of £51 million over four years has already been announced for, inter alia, an accelerated programme of river flood defence capital works in England. The Environment Agency's staff in East Sussex are reviewing options for flood defence of communities on East Sussex rivers in the light of experience of the recent floods. They plan to meet local residents in the near future to explain those options. It is therefore too early to say what plans there are for river dredging flood defence works in East Sussex, whether it would be effective, or the extent to which such work would attract funding from this Department.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to strengthen and enhance the flood defences at York. [138545]

Mr. Morley: I understand that the flood defences at York have operated to their design standard or better in the recent flooding. The Environment Agency will be checking the necessity for urgent repairs and reviewing the need for strengthening and enhancing the defences once the immediate work of dealing with the floods is completed. No doubt they will consider if advantage can be taken of the Government's additional funding over the next four years, a major element of which is aimed at accelerating the programme of river flood defence works.

Thames Barrier

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment has been made of the impact of global warming and sea level rise on the risk of the Thames Barrier being unable to withstand future storm surges. [138498]

Mr. Morley: The Thames Barrier is the largest component of the complex system of gates, walls and embankments which form the tidal barrier to London and the Thames Estuary. The Barrier is a robust and flexible installation with a design based on rates of sea level rise predicted in the 1970s which were higher than those currently anticipated. It provides London with a high level of protection from tidal flooding and with normal care and maintenance should continue to do so until at least the latter half of this century. Even then, although the Barrier may need to be closed more frequently, it will continue to fulfil its primary function.

The Environment Agency is currently developing its tidal defence strategy for the next 100 years, with several studies already in progress.

Rivers

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans the Government have to regulate flows of water in the (a) River Severn, (b) River Derwent, (c) River Ouse, (d) River Aire and (e) River Don. [138560]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 16 November 2000]: I have asked the Environment Agency, in conjunction with their partners, to produce a full report on the flooding, its effects, how flood warning and emergency response worked and what lessons we can learn. The Agency will initiate this when the immediate work of dealing with the floods has been completed; the report should be available by Easter. In the meantime there are no new plans for these rivers.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the river improvement schemes that will be funded from the new money he has announced for the Environment Agency. [138559]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 16 November 2000]: The additional funding of £51 million over the next four years is primarily for the Environment Agency, but some may be allocated to local authorities and Internal Drainage Boards as well. A major element of the package is designed to accelerate the programme of river flood defence works. The Ministry is approaching all the operating authorities to establish their plans with a view to determining the content of the enhanced national river works programme.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Guided Tours (Summer Recess)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what operational and financial assessment she has made of the arrangements for guided tours of the Palace of Westminster during the 2000 summer recess with special reference to the effectiveness of (a) these arrangements and (b) the previous practice of using the same guides in the recess as in the parliamentary session. [139138]

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer of 14 November 2000, Official Report, column 589W.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Police Service

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 23 October 2000, Official Report, column 19W, what the perceived community background is of members of the Chief Constable's Change Management Team. [135824]

Mr. Ingram: As I indicated in my earlier reply, I do not consider it appropriate to comment on the perceived community background of members of the Change Management Team.

Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions and on what dates the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission has given him advice with respect to taking measures to create rights supplementary to those in the European Convention on Human Rights; and what advice was given which was not supplementary to the European Convention. [136706]

Mr. George Howarth: One of the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission's statutory duties is to provide advice to the Secretary of State on the scope for defining, in Westminster legislation, rights supplementary to those in the European Convention on Human Rights. The Commission is currently undertaking an extensive consultation exercise and will submit a preliminary report to the Secretary of State next March.

Compensation Agency

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements he has made to carry out a quinquennial review of the Compensation Agency. [139442]

Mr. Ingram: I have agreed that a review should be undertaken. The Compensation Agency was previously reviewed in 1995. Accordingly it should, like other agencies, now be subject to a quinquennial review. The review will commence immediately and should be completed by 30 May 2001.

The review will be directed by a Steering Group under the Chairmanship of the Director of Resources in my Department.

The Steering Group will be supported by a Project Team led by a member of the Senior Civil Service from outside the Agency. The leader of the Project Team will report to the Steering Group on a regular basis.

The review process will provide extensive opportunities for consultation with internal and external stakeholders and will follow the procedures recommended in the guidance for the review of agencies and non-departmental public bodies published by the Cabinet Office.

Forensic Science Agency

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements he has made to carry out a quinquennial review of Forensic Science Northern Ireland. [139443]

Mr. Ingram: I have agreed that a review should be undertaken. Forensic Science Northern Ireland completed five years of operation as an executive agency on 31 August 2000. Accordingly it should, like other agencies, now be subject to a quinquennial review. The review will commence immediately and should be completed by 30 April 2001.

The review will be directed by a Steering Group under the Chairmanship of the Director of Resources in my Department.

The Steering Group will be supported by a Project Team led by a member of the Senior Civil Service from outside Forensic Science Northern Ireland. The leader of the Project Team will report to the Steering Group on a regular basis.

The review process will provide extensive opportunities for consultation with internal and external stakeholders and will follow the procedures recommended in the guidance for the review of agencies and non-departmental public bodies published by the Cabinet Office.

PRIME MINISTER

Lord Birt

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 24 July 2000, Official Report, columns 442–43W, on Lord Birt, if he will list the activities undertaken by Lord Birt in his capacity as his adviser on crime; how many meetings he has had with Lord Birt on crime since Lord Birt's appointment; what reports on crime he has been presented with by Lord Birt; and what has been the total amount to date claimed by Lord Birt for out-of-pocket expenses. [137320]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 November 2000]: Lord Birt is looking at criminality and long-term social trends. The focus of his work to date has been analysing existing data on offenders, offences and victims. As part of this work, Lord Birt has met Ministers and officials from relevant Departments and practitioners. I understand that he has claimed just over £300 in out-of-pocket expenses.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Chambré Hardman

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions his Department has held concerning the retention of Chambré Hardman's photographs, negatives and house in Liverpool; and what was the outcome of those discussions. [138749]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We acknowledge that the Chambré Hardman collection is of national importance and support the wish to ensure its conservation and presentation to the public. My Department has had discussions with a number of interested parties, including the National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside, the National Museum of Film, Photography and Television, and the North West Museum Service, to ensure the preservation of the collection and the house.

There are a number of potential solutions for the long-term care and public presentation of both the collection, and Chambré Hardman's house in Liverpool. It is now for the Trustees of the Chambré Hardman Trust to assess all of the available options; to determine which of these is the most realistically able to meet its objectives; and to develop a viable business case for the preferred solution.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Payments

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in (a) the City of Leeds and (b) the Leeds, Central constituency have been in receipt of (i) Income Support, (ii) Disability Living Allowance, (iii) Incapacity Benefit, (iv) Unemployment Benefit and (v) Housing Benefit in each of the last 10 years. [138261]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of benefits is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Hilary Benn, dated 16 November 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people in (a) the City of Leeds and (b) the Leeds Central constituency have been in receipt of (i) income support, (ii) disability living allowance, (iii) incapacity benefit, (iv) unemployment benefit, and (v) housing benefit in each of the last 10 years.

The data is not available in the requested format, however, the information that is available is supplied in the attached tables.

I hope this is helpful.

(i) Income Support claimants

Year	Leeds local authority	Leeds, Central constituency
May 1990	59,500	—
May 1991	61,100	—
May 1992	68,100	—
May 1993	74,600	—
May 1994	75,500	—
May 1995	71,000	—
May 1996	69,300	—
May 1997	48,500	—
May 1998	47,700	—
August 1998	—	10,500
May 1999	46,900	10,300
May 2000	47,300	10,800

Notes:

1. Constituency information represents constituency boundaries as at May 1997.
2. Parliamentary constituency data are only available from August 1998 onwards. These data were collated in the quarterly statistics as quoted in source, but data prior to August 1998 could not be collected as there was no methodology to collate the information at this time.
3. The numbers are based on either 1 per cent. or 5 per cent. sample data and are therefore subject to a degree of sampling error.
4. Numbers are rounded to the nearest hundred.
5. Income Support Figures prior to 1997 include unemployed cases.
6. Jobseeker's Allowance replaced Unemployment Benefit and Income Support for the unemployed from October 1996.

May 1998	24,705	4,543
May 1999	24,997	4,567
May 2000	26,054	4,702

Notes:

1. Constituency information represents constituency boundaries as at May 1997.
2. Parliamentary constituency data are only available from 1998 onwards.
3. Incomplete regional data also means that local authority or constituency estimates are not available for DLA prior to 1993. Reliable postcodes were held on the DLA computer system but the postcodes held on the Mobility Allowance and Attendance Allowance computer systems were unreliable and missing for many cases. The quarterly sample is drawn from all three computer systems and therefore the postcode data was incomplete.
4. Figures up to 1997 are rounded to the nearest hundred, based on either 1 per cent. or 5 per cent. sample data and are therefore subject to a degree of sampling error.
5. The years 1998 onwards which are based on 100 per cent. data and are not rounded.

May 1998	18,700	3,300
May 1999	17,600	2,900
May 2000	16,600	2,800

Notes:
1. Constituency information represents constituency boundaries as at May 1997.
2. Parliamentary constituency data are only available from 1998 onwards.
3. Incapacity Benefit replaced Sickness and Invalidity Benefits on 13 April 1995. Prior to this local authority information is not available, as postcodes were not present on the data sets.
4. The numbers are based on 5 per cent. sample data and are therefore subject to a degree of sampling error.
5. Numbers are rounded to the nearest hundred.
6. Incapacity Benefit figures exclude a small number of cases held clerically.
7. For Incapacity Benefit a rating factor has been used on figures for the Leeds Local Authority from May 1996 to May 1999, to account for missing postcodes.

Duplicate Benefit Payments

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 31 October 2000, Official Report, columns 346–47W, what conclusions the Benefits Agency internal audit came to regarding the role of EDS in the duplication of income support payments on 17 and 18 January. [138338]

Mr. Rooker: The administration of benefit payments is a matter for Alexis Cleveland the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Frank Field, dated 17 November 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to respond to your Parliamentary Question asking what conclusions the Benefits Agency (BA) internal audit came to regarding the role of EDS in the duplication of income support payments on 17th and 18th January.

The report concluded that responsibility for the error lay with DSS Information Technology Services Group (ITSG), Benefits Agency (BA) and EDS. The report did not apportion levels of responsibility; it identified errors on the part of all parties. The report concluded:

'Following a technical problem, incorrect (re-start) action by ITSG led to the creation of the £10.5m Income Support file with an incomplete number of records. The EDS automated system to transfer files to BACS had limited in-built validation and reconciliation checks and this allowed the £10.5m file to be forwarded to BACS . . . Reconciliation checks undertaken within the BA identified a problem but the incident handling and escalation procedures were inadequate'.

As mentioned in my response on 30 October, Official Report columns 346–347, the report contained a series of thirteen recommendations. EDS is a key stakeholder, working with DSS in the programme of activity to implement these recommendations, which include improvements to validation and reconciliation checks to prevent a reoccurrence of the original incident. My previous response provided more detail.

I hope this additional information is helpful.

Climate Change

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what strategic measures he is taking to allow for environmental changes induced by climate change. [137183]

Mr. Bayley: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer from my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Environment on 13 November 2000, Official Report, columns 469–70W.

Civil Servants (Relocation)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 2 May 2000, Official

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Report, column 37W, on relocation of civil servants, which relocation companies hold contracts with his Department for the relocation of civil servants; when these contracts were last renewed; where the contracts were advertised; and what the length and value is of each contract. [137096]

Mr. Rooker: This Department has a contract with Cendant Relocation plc. The contract was advertised in Official Journal European Communities (OJEC0) on 13 August 1997. The contract was renewed in May 1998 for three years with a possible two-year extension and has an estimated annual value of £800,000.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he collects on the minimum incomes required by different categories of pensioner households to afford a minimum acceptable standard of living; and what proposals he has to improve its (a) flow and (b) accuracy. [137270]

Mr. Rooker: A number of research studies have been conducted in this area. The range of methods which can be used to explore questions of absolute and relative adequacy of benefits include budget standards methodology, deprivations studies, expenditure studies and consensual studies. All these research methods are considered when assessing benefit levels; however, no single method can be used to calculate an "adequate" income. What people need to live on varies greatly depending on their needs, age, proximity to friends and relatives—it is not possible to produce figures showing what is adequate for all pensioner families.

Pensioner Statistics

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women will reach the statutory retirement age in each of the next five years. [138521]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Population attaining state pension age in year shown, United Kingdom

Thousand

Year	Men	Women	Total
2001	269	294	563
2002	273	319	592
2003	276	341	616
2004	275	347	622
2005	266	348	614

Notes:

1. State Pension age is currently 65 for men and 60 for women.
2. Population projections for the United Kingdom and its constituent countries are carried out every two years by the Government Actuary's Department in consultation with the Registrars General. The latest projections, based on the population at mid-1998, were published in November 1999.
3. Population projections provide estimates of the number of people by age last birthday at the middle of each year. The figures in the table have been derived from these estimates.
4. Not everyone starts to receive State Retirement benefits on reaching the State Pension age.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners who are entitled to the Minimum Income Guarantee there are in the constituency of Middlesbrough, South and Cleveland, East. [138857]

Mr. Rooker: There are around 2,800 recipients of the Minimum Income Guarantee in the parliamentary constituency of Middlesbrough, South and Cleveland, East.

Notes:

1. Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample and are, therefore subject to a degree of sampling error.
2. Pensioners are defined as where the claimant and/or partner are aged 60 or over.
3. The figure is rounded to the nearest hundred.
4. Cases are allocated to each parliamentary constituency by matching the postcode against the 2000 version 1 ONS Postcode Directory.

NIRS2

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Benefits Agency will have fully recovered from the effects of the delayed implementation of the NIRS2 computer; and if he will make a statement. [139571]

Mr. Rooker: The contract for NIRS2 was signed in 1995 and there have been problems with the system from the start, the full effects of which we are still trying to resolve.

We are sorry to report that the Benefits Agency (BA) will not complete its review of benefit claims affected by the delayed implementation of NIRS2 by the end of this year as had been expected. Although good progress has been made with outstanding cases in BA offices, full completion of the necessary benefits reviews is dependent on the clearance of work arrears in the Inland Revenue's National Insurance Contributions Office (NICO) that result in a change to the contribution record.

NICO is urgently looking at when it expects to have completed its own recovery from the late implementation of NIRS2. BA recovery cannot be achieved until after the NICO recovery has been achieved and this will not be by the end of this year.

As contribution records are brought up to date, BA offices will be prompted by NIRS2 to review an old or existing benefit claim if the change to the record has affected the previous benefit rate. Many of these prompted reviews however will not require the rate in payment to be revised because the contingency arrangements deployed by the Benefits Agency will have ensured the new NIRS2 rate is already in payment.

I would like to take this opportunity to express my regret and apologise to those pensioners and other benefit claimants who have been adversely affected by these delays. Although most benefit reviews have been completed and in the great majority of cases the rate in payment found to be correct because of the contingency measures deployed by the Benefits Agency, my hon. Friend will wish to know that:

140,153 people have been underpaid a total of £58 million; of that number and amount, 123,924 are pensioners with underpayments amounting to £41 million;

267,590 people have received compensation amounting to £3.6 million comprising £2.7 million under the special £10 scheme announced in February 1999 and £900,000 under the Departmental Special Payments Scheme;

6,564 people have been overpaid benefit amounting to £2 million;

there were at 15 September 111,433 cases waiting to be reviewed by BA offices, of which 96,776 were pensioners and widows.

There are still a small number of new benefit and pension claims for which NIRS2 cannot provide all or some of the amounts payable. For these cases, contingency arrangements such as manual calculations remain in place. The priority is to ensure that benefit or pension is paid on time. Where this is not possible, however, payment of compensation is available either within the normal rules of the Department's Special Payments Scheme or by way of the special £10 scheme we announced on 1 February 1999.

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 526W, on pension expenditure, if he will provide corresponding estimates for each year from 1992–93 to 1995–96 inclusive. [139074]

Mr. Rooker: By 2002–03 GDP is forecast to reach a level 32 per cent. higher in real terms than it was in 1992–93.

Expenditure as a percentage of GDP

	Retirement pensions[1]	Means-tested benefits for pensioners[2]	Other benefits paid to pensioners[3]	Total

[1] Includes Retirement Pension basic and earnings-related components.
[2] Includes Income Support, Social Fund Payments, Housing Benefit paid to people aged 60 and over.
[3] Includes non-contributory Retirement Pension and Christmas Bonus.
Note:
Excludes special needs benefits such as Attendance Allowance.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions he has used his powers to require local authorities to take specific measures to tackle housing benefit fraud; and if he will list in each case the date those powers were exercised and the local authority concerned. [139072]

Mr. Rooker: To date we have made one such Direction, to Northampton Borough Council, in August 2000.

DEFENCE

RAF Aircraft

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF aircraft, and of which types, have been (a) retired from service and (b) put into reserve, in each of the past three years. [138426]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested in the table.

	Number withdrawn from service[1]			Number placed in storage[2]
Aircraft Type	1997	1998	1999	1997	1998	1999

[1] Aircraft withdrawn from service during the year prior to disposal or transfer to an upgrade programme. Excludes aircraft lost in crashes.
[2] Aircraft placed in storage during the year. Excludes aircraft withdrawn from service and awaiting disposal.
[3] The Nimrod MR2 fleet is being reduced prior to the introduction of the Nimrod MRA4. These airframes have been transferred to the Nimrod MRA4 programme.

Tucano Aircraft

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Tucano aircraft to be returned to service; and if he will make a statement on the airworthiness of the Tucano fleet. [138428]

Mr. Spellar: Following the temporary cessation of Tucano flying on 4 September 2000 the first Tucano aircraft were returned to service on 29 September 2000. There is a rolling programme under way to bring the entire fleet back into service and the full training fleet of aircraft should be available by the end of February 2001.

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of repairs to the faults recently identified in the RAF's Tucano aircraft. [138427]

Mr. Spellar: The cost of repairs to the rudder controls on aircraft currently in the Tucano training fleet is estimated at around £250,000. Modified parts with a greatly extended service life will subsequently be fitted across the Tucano fleet. The total cost of the repair and subsequent modification programme to all RAF Tucano aircraft will be in the order of £1 million.

Harpoon Missiles

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the service life is of the Royal Navy's stocks of Harpoon missiles; and what upgrade and refurbishment work is planned. [138430]

Mr. Spellar: Ship launched stocks of Harpoon missiles are planned to provide offensive anti-ship capability to the Royal Navy until 2025. Submarine-launched stocks of Harpoon missiles are currently planned to go out of service in 2003.

Regular maintenance and minor modification is carried out as required; there are presently no plans for a major missile refurbishment programme. Some modification work is being undertaken on Type 22 and Type 23 frigates to enhance the missile system capability within coastal waters. Other options for increasing the Royal Navy's offensive capability are being considered, which may lead to an upgrade of some of the existing missile stock.

RN Personnel

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent Royal Navy personnel are capable of diving in conditions other than shallow and benign waters; and if he will make a statement. [138995]

Mr. Spellar: RN personnel divers can dive in sea conditions up to sea state five and to depths of up to 80 m. In extremis RN divers can operate in poorer sea states to prevent loss of life.

Condoms

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will give a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Leyton and Wanstead, to which he gave a holding answer on 25 July 2000, Official Report, column 554W. [139150]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Arms Exports (Israel)

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those arms and components for military or security equipment licensed for sale to Israel since 1997. [135470]

Dr. Howells: Details of export licensing decisions between 2 May 1997 and 31 December 1999 have been set out in the Government's Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls, published by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office; copies are in the Library of the House. The reports list by country of destination the numbers of export licences issued and refused in each equipment category and give details of the military equipment for which licences have been granted. They also set out the value of defence exports to each country.

As regards the period 1 January to 31 October 2000, 153 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and 12 Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Israel. The information is as summarised broken down according to the entries in the Military List under which the goods on each licence are controlled (known as their rating). It could not be broken down in the manner requested as the equipment covered by most entries in the Military List could be used for military or security purposes.

Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings (and OIELs may also cover a range of countries). Where this is so, the licence is included in the Table in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

This information does not cover any Media OIELs that may have been issued during this period. Media OIELs authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists when working in areas of conflict.

In addition, Israel is a permitted destination on certain Open General Export Licences covering the export of goods on the Military List; copies of all Open General Export Licences are placed in the Library of the House.

Post Office Closures

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the factors underlying the rate of post office closures since 1997. [136710]

Mr. Byers: Post office closures remain below past peak levels. In 1991–92, 478 offices closed and in 1984–85 395 closed. The number of rural office closures in the first half of the current financial year is running at a lower level than in the same period last year. I have asked the Post Office for an analysis of the factors underlying Post Office closures. This analysis is to include age of person moving out of the business, property sold, location and reason. In addition, we are implementing in full the recommendations of the Performance and Innovation Unit report to modernise the post office network and strengthen its future viability.

Consumer Protection

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the representations received in connection with consumer protection legislation. [138514]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 16 November 2000]: We have had 31 representations from members of the public, including nine coupons from the National Consumer Council's campaign in the Daily Express. We have had nine joint representations from the National Consumer Council and the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux, as well as a further representation from the National Consumer Council and representations from individual Citizens Advice Bureau. In addition we have had representations from the Consumer's Association with the Federation of Small Business, the Welsh Consumer Council and Direct Line Insurance plc.

Many of the representations were forwarded to us by Members of Parliament. In addition we have received representations from my hon. Friends the Members for Clwyd, South (Mr. Jones), for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), for Stourbridge (Ms Shipley), and for Vale of Clwyd (Mr. Ruane), and two from my hon. Friend the Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell).

SmithKline Beecham/Glaxo

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the reasons for the delay in the merger of SmithKline Beecham and Glaxo. [138553]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 16 November 2000]: The European Commission approved the merger of Glaxo Wellcome and SmithKline Beecham on 8 May. The US Federal Trade Commission are considering the competition implications of the market in smoking cessation products relating to Glaxo Wellcome's prescription drug Zyban and SmithKline Beecham's over-the-counter products Nicorette and Nicoderm. This is a matter for the US authorities.

Fuel Prices

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer the retail pricing of petrol products to the Competition Commission. [139100]

Dr. Howells: Under UK competition legislation, it is for the Director General of Fair Trading to investigate allegations of anti-competitive behaviour and if appropriate make a reference to the Competition Commission under the Fair Trading Act 1973 or take action under the Competition Act 1998.

Steel Industry

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what recent discussions he has had with the senior management of Corus regarding the future of the steel industry in Teesside and research and development in Corus; [138854]

(2) what recent discussions he has had with the senior management of Corus on the future of the steel industry. [138856]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has had discussions with senior executives from Corus on several occasions in recent months to discuss a range of matters affecting UK operations. From time to time we also visit Corus plants for discussions with local management and my officials maintain a regular dialogue with the company.

MOX Fuel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent communications he has had from the European Commission in respect of the adequacy of data provided to the Commission in regard to the applicability of Euratom Treaty Article 37 to the MOX demonstration facility at Sellafield. [137871]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

Acting on a complaint, the European Commission has asked what general data have been provided under Article 37 of the Euratom Treaty, covering the operation of the MOX Demonstration Facility, and requested other information relevant to the issue of whether such data should have been submitted. The Government's response confirmed their view that, on the basis of current guidance and of discussions with the Commission in 1996, no submission of data is necessary in respect of the MOX Demonstration Facility. Notwithstanding this view, the Government have offered to provide the Commission with comprehensive background information in order to assist it in replying to the complainant.

Deregulation Orders

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many deregulation orders have been passed in each of the last three years. [136407]

Mr. Stringer: I have been asked to reply.

The deregulation orders passed in each of the last three years are as follows:

1997—12

The Deregulation (Casinos) Order 1997 (SI no. 1997/950)

The Deregulation (Employment in Bars) Order 1997 (SI no. 1997/957)

1999—4

The Deregulation (Weights and Measures) Order 1999 (SI no. 1999/503)

The Deregulation (Pipe-lines) Order 1999 (SI no. 1999/742)

The Deregulation (Casinos) Order 1999 (SI no. 1999/2136)

The Deregulation (Millennium Licensing) Order 1999 (SI no. 1999/2137).

HOME DEPARTMENT

European Refugee Fund

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he has put in place to deal with applications for financing under the European Refugee Fund. [139444]

Mrs. Roche: The European Refugee Fund (ERF) is intended to support three categories of project: (i) conditions for reception; (ii) integration of persons whose stay in the member state is of a lasting and/or stable nature; and (iii) voluntary return and reintegration. The ERF is administered in European Union member states by Responsible Authorities. The Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) is the Responsible Authority for the United Kingdom.

IND is issuing a public call today for proposals for financing under the ERF in 2000 and 2001. The public call notice summarises the criteria for financing, how to obtain detailed guidelines and an application form, and arrangements for submitting applications. Applications must be submitted by 29 December. The public call notice can be found on the IND website (www.homeoffice.gov.uk/ind) and a copy has been placed in the Library.

DNA Testing

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the reliability of DNA testing (a) in convicting the guilty and (b) in exonerating the innocent. [137936]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The reliability of DNA evidence is assured through the internal quality assurance measures adopted by the Forensic Science Service (FSS) and through external accreditation by the British Standards Institute (BSI) and United Kingdom Accreditation Service (UKAS) to the BS EN ISO 9000 and M10 National Standards. This independent accreditation of the DNA process involves regular audit to ensure the standards are maintained.

The more advanced SGMplus technique was introduced by the FSS in September 1999. A statistical assessment, to be published in the International Journal of Legal Medicine, showed that when using this process the probability of a chance match between a full DNA profile obtained from a suspect's sample and another one from a crime scene stain left by another person was less than one in a billion.

Prisons

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the ratio of staff to inmates is in (a) each prison holding 18 to 21-year-olds and (b) each institution holding juveniles. [137724]

Mr. Boateng: This information is given in the table. Information about Doncaster prison was not readily available and I shall write to the hon. Member about this.

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 611W, if he will (a) list the categories of offence for which the 1,756 people were sentenced and (b) the action taken following the breaches of the conditions of their release. [137993]

Mr. Boateng: An analysis of the index offences of the 1,756 prisoners who were placed on the home detention curfew scheme and who breached the conditions of their licence is contained in the table.

Where a breach is notified to the Prison Service, consideration is given to the most appropriate course of action, in the light of the available legal powers and the circumstances of the individual case. Where an offender breaches his licence conditions, the presumption is that the Prison Service will always revoke the licence unless there are legal considerations which prevent this or make it impracticable, or other exceptional circumstances. Of the 1,756 cases referred to, 1,294 had their licences revoked by the Secretary of State pursuant to section 38A(1) or section 39 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991. In a further 46 cases, the breach was reported to the police or probation service to consider initiating breach action through the courts under section 38(1) of the Act. In addition, those prisoners who were convicted of committing a further offence during the currency of their licence, and therefore were in breach of their licence conditions, would have been liable, under section 40 of the Act, to an additional sentence of imprisonment.

In 416 cases legal considerations prevented revocation action. The majority of these were cases where the breach of licence was notified to the Prison Service only after the licence had expired; as my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Hope) of 22 May 2000, Official Report, column 360W, indicated, a significant proportion of cases involving further charges brought against curfewees have not been notified to the Prison Service by the police. Action is currently being taken to improve reporting arrangements.

Detention and Training Orders

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will issue guidelines on mobility programmes for young people serving sentences on a detention and training order. [138436]

Mr. Boateng: The detention and training order was implemented on 1 April 2000. It is the new main custodial sentence for juveniles aged 12–17.

The rules for mobility programmes (which can involve escorted absences or temporary release for training and rehabilitation) vary between types of institutions.

We are looking at the policy and arrangements, with a view to issuing guidance over the next few months.

European Public Prosecutor

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Ludlow tabled on 23 October (ref. 134594) relating to the European Public Prosecutor. [138859]

Mrs. Roche: The question to which the hon. Member refers raises a difficult issue which is being considered. I shall provide a substantive reply shortly.

Anti-social Behaviour Orders

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many anti-social behaviour orders have been issued since April 1999 in the boroughs of (a) Middlesbrough, (b) Stockton, (c) Hartlepool and (d) Redcar and Cleveland; and if he will make a statement. [138855]

Mr. Charles Clarke: A breakdown of the number of anti-social behaviour orders (ASBOs) issued by borough is not held centrally. However, Cleveland Police inform me that seven ASBOs have been issued so far in Cleveland—two in Middlesbrough, two in Hartlepool and three in Stockton on Tees.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the average cost is of issuing anti-social behaviour orders; [137599]

(2) how many anti-social behaviour orders have been issued since April 1999 in (a) England and Wales, (b) the Greater London area and (c) the Royal Borough of Kingston. [137598]

Mr. Charles Clarke [Pursuant to the reply, 13 November 2000, c. 531W]: At least 10—rather than 30 as previously stated—anti-social behaviour orders issued since the measure was implemented have been made in the Greater London area.

Cleveland Police

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of ethnic minority (a) officers and (b) civilian staff in Cleveland police force in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [138853]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The figures are as follows:

	Officers	Civilians
March
1998	18	5
1999	9	5
2000	17	4

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has set every police force in England and Wales minority ethnic employment targets which are intended to ensure that forces are representative of the communities which they serve by 2009. Cleveland police's target for minority ethnic officers is 29, and for civilians is 12.

CABINET OFFICE

E-government

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when the last meeting of the Cabinet Office Central IT Unit on e-government took place; and when the next meeting will be. [138740]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Central IT Unit (CITU) has not existed as a separate Division within the Cabinet Office since it was subsumed into the Office of the e-Envoy in July this year. At the same time it was renamed the "e-government group".

The Central Information Technology Unit (CITU) was set up in November 1995. CITU's remit was to advise Ministers on the development of their strategy for the use of IT by Government.

Current activities include taking forward the Information Age Government agenda of the Modernising Government White Paper including the follow up work to "e-government: a strategic framework for public services in the Information Age". This work includes advising Departments on the development of their own e-business strategies and monitoring progress on the Prime Minister's target that by 2005 100 per cent. of dealings with Government should be available.

This work now sits within the Office of the e-Envoy, a group comprising approximately 75 people organised in three groups:

e-government

e-commerce

e-communication.

The website contains full information about all of their work: www.e-envoy.gov.uk

Regulatory Impact Assessments

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the regulatory impact assessments published in the last six months. [139137]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Government are committed to ensuring that regulations are necessary, give effective protection, balance cost and risk, are fair and command public confidence. In accordance with this, we require Departments to produce and publish RIAs for all regulatory proposals likely to have an impact on business.

I have presented to Parliament today a Command Paper listing 107 RIAs published between 1 January and 30 June 2000. Copies of those listed have been placed in the House Libraries. This is the thirteenth such Command Paper.

TREASURY

E-commerce Consultation Forum

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times the Electronic Commerce Consultation Forum has met; on what dates; if he will publish their deliberations and recommendations; and if he will list the sub-groups of the forum. [135899]

Mr. Timms: The Electronic Commerce Consultation Forum has met three times since its establishment in June 1999. The dates and minutes of these meeting and details of the sub-groups can be found on the Inland Revenue website at www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/e-commerce/ecom4.htm.

Beer and Cider Excise Duty

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to Table B11 of his pre-Budget Report, what the assumptions are behind the increases in projected beer and cider excise duty revenues between the financial years 2000–01 and 2001–02 in respect of (a) the measure of inflation used, (b) the rate of inflation projected, (c) the month and year in which inflation is projected and (d) the increase in pence per pint of (i) beer and (ii) cider, will such an increase give rise to in financial year 2001–02. [138660]

Mr. Timms: The measure of inflation used is the all-items PRI in the 12 months to September 2001, as published in Table B3 of the pre-Budget Report. Estimates of the effect of duty changes on the price of beer and cider are published by HM Treasury in the "Tax Ready Reckoner and Tax Reliefs, November 2000", copies of which are in the Library.

Parliamentary Questions

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will provide a substantive reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for Louth and Horncastle for answer on 6 November (ref. 135972). [138851]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Shortly.

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to amend the Inland Revenue Departmental Expenditure Limit and running costs limit for 2000–01. [139445]

Dawn Primarolo: Subject to parliamentary approval of the Supplementary Estimate for Class XVI, Vote 6 the Inland Revenue Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be decreased by £14,800,000 from £2,245,371,000 to £2,230,571,000. The Inland Revenue running cost limit will also be reduced by £3,500,000 from £2,377,079,000 to £2,373,579,000. This is needed to offset a reduction in anticipated receipts within the Valuation Office Agency.

The reduction arises from a £15 million transfer to the Cabinet Office for the Department's contribution to the Government IT gateway project offset by Valuation Office Agency award of £0.2 million from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Departmental Policies (Gorton)

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out, including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the constituency, the effect on the Manchester, Gorton constituency, of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [136169]

Ms Armstrong: The Gorton constituency has benefited from a range of Government initiatives since 2 May 1997 including:

Regeneration (including Housing Initiatives)

The capital receipts initiative in Manchester has allowed a greater degree of flexibility in investment in the council stock. The investment in the Gorton constituency in public sector housing is

	£ million
1997–98	6.3
1998–99	8.0
1999–100	6.9
2000–01[1]	8.9

[1] Projected

Northmoor Road Renewal Area

This was declared in 1998 and is an integrated regeneration programme including social, environmental, and physical elements and has received approximately £3 million in funding from Single Regeneration Budget funding, Housing Capital Programme, and significant additional investment from the Housing Corporation and the private sector.

Gorton Renewal Area

This was declared in 1992, and was one of the first new-style housing "Renewal Areas". It has had approximately £2.8 million investment from Housing Capital Programme since 1997.

A6 Corridor

Longsight and Levenshulme form part of this Single Regeneration Budget scheme which also includes Ardwick. It has been allocated £9 million over the 1997–2004 period (to date £4 million has been spent by the partnership) to improve social and economic regeneration in the area.

The North West Development Agency have also spent £850k on a mixed use (residential and industrial) development in south Levenshulme.

Neighbourhood Renewal Fund

Manchester will receive an estimated £41 million over the next three years as part of the Neighbourhood Renewal Fund announced recently. The fund will help local authorities meet their Public Service Agreement targets in areas such as raising schools standards, and reducing unemployment—reducing burglary, narrowing the health gap between deprived areas and the rest of the country and improving the standard of social housing.

New East Manchester Ltd.

New East Manchester Ltd. one of three Urban Regeneration Companies in the country, has the responsibility to encourage development and improve demand across the whole of East Manchester.

Transport

The recent opening of the final section of the M60 Manchester Outer Ring Road (Denton to Middleton) will improve communications to the constituency.

Expansion of the Metrolink will provide new links between Manchester, Oldham, Rochdale, Ashton and Manchester Airport. Total cost is £500 million of which £250 million will be provided by Government. While the constituency will not be directly served by a new line, new stations on the extensions to Ashton and Manchester airport will be accessible to the constituency.

The South East Manchester Multi Modal study which covers the constituency in its study area will make recommendations for a long term strategy, and a plan of specific interventions, to address the transport problems in the study area.

Local Government Finance Settlement

The following table shows the Government Grant to Manchester as part of the Local Government Finance Settlement. A statistical analysis of what proportion was spent in the Gorton constituency is not available.

	£ million
1997–98	362.47
1998–99	375.62
1999–100	390.57
2000–101	401.97

European Funding

Objective 2 1997–99

The City Pride Action Plan area covers the Gorton constituency. The Plan has been allocated £36 million of European Regional Development Fund (ERDF) and European Social Fund grant to support a range of project activity from broad business support and innovation and technology to investment in the tourism and cultural sector.

In addition, the constituency overlaps 3 of the 6 Community Economic Development Action Plans that cover the city of Manchester. The 3 Action Plans—Princess Road Corridor, Stockport Road Corridor and East Link—have been allocated over £5.5 million and among the projects being supported in the Gorton constituency are:

Rusholme Environmental and Physical Improvements (£70,000 ERDF)

Longsight Millennium Recycling Action (£75,000 ERDF)

Levenshulme Block Improvement Scheme (£100,000 ERDF)

Monastery of St. Francis and Gorton Trust (£13,000 ERDF).

Local Transport Plans

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much has been applied for by each local authority in their local transport plans for (a) maintenance of principal highways, (b) maintenance and strengthening of bridges, (c) individual schemes costing over £5 million and (d) integrated transport measures costing less than £5 million for each year from 2001–02 to 2005–06. [138068]

Mr. Hill: I have placed a copy of the information requested in the Libraries of the House.

Volunteers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will mark next year's International Year of Volunteers by spending a day working as a volunteer. [137427]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 13 November 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 13 November 2000, Official Report, column 531W. I fully support the aims of the International Year of Volunteers and will consider any request to participate nearer the time.

Climate Change

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to publish the UK's climate change programme [139109]

Mr. Prescott: I have today laid before Parliament, "Climate Change: The UK Programme (Command Number 4913)". Our programme sets out how we will deliver the UK's Kyoto target to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 12.5 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2008–12 and move towards our domestic goal to cut carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010. We estimate that the policies and measures set out in the programme could cut the UK's greenhouse gas emissions by 23 per cent. by 2010 and carbon dioxide emissions by 19 per cent. Further non-quantified measures could achieve the domestic goal.

I am also publishing the following documents alongside the programme, copies of which will be placed in the Libraries of the House:

Projections of non-CO_2 greenhouse gas emissions for the United Kingdom and constituent countries;

Energy Efficiency Commitment 2002–05—The Government's Provisional Conclusions;

Climate Change and UK Nature Conservation: A Review of the Impact of Climate Change on UK Species and Habitat Conservation Policy;

Summary of Responses to the Draft Climate Change Programme; and

An information and activity pack on global warming for 7 to 11-year-olds.

HEALTH

Armed Forces (Medical Services)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recent reports he has received on the availability of medical services in the armed forces; and what advice he has received on increasing their availability; [136008]

(2) if he will make a statement on trends in the availability of medical services in the armed forces over the last three years. [136007]

Ms Stuart: Defence Medical Services (DMS) is responsible for providing medical services in the armed forces. The Department of Health is aware of the report issued by the Ministry of Defence in December 1998 entitled, "Defence Medical Services: A Strategy for the Future" which explained that there are serious workforce shortages in DMS.

At present workforce levels are stabilising and the MOD are exploring new ways of meeting the regular and reserve medical manpower requirements. This work is being undertaken in close consultation with the Department and the National Health Service. For example, the NHS will in future be including DMS' requirements in medical student numbers.

The future strategy for DMS identified a gap at the higher 'strategic' level and closer links have now been established between the MOD and Department with NHS representatives being appointed to the two DMS top management boards. To supplement this activity and to direct work a Joint Steering Group has been established by the MOD and Department with the Scottish Executive and the Welsh Office also represented.

Wheelchair Voucher Scheme

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the wheelchair voucher scheme. [136270]

Mr. Hutton: We have asked all wheelchair services to continue to operate a voucher scheme, which offers users a choice of wheelchair to meet their needs. In making the funding for the wheelchair initiatives recurrent from 1 April 2000, we have removed the distinction on what should be spent on National Health Service indoor/outdoor powered wheelchairs and or vouchers. We have asked health authorities and provider services to consult with service users and take a flexible approach to ensuring the money meets local wheelchair needs and priorities.

Prosorba Column

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 23 October 2000, Official Report, column 86W, on the Prosorba Column, what reports he has received on the effectiveness of the Prosorba Column as a treatment for arthritis. [137086]

Mr. Denham: The Department has not received any reports on the effectiveness of the Prosorba Column as a treatment of arthritis.

Electronic Database

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of the Electronic Record Demonstrator Implementation Programme and progress towards achieving a national electronic health record database; what timescale he is working to; and if he plans to fund the chosen programme from (a) NHS funds, (b) a public-private partnership and (c) other sources. [137273]

Ms Stuart: The Electronic Record Development and Implementation Programme (ERDIP) was launched in November 1999. Following the selection exercise the names of the successful Electronic Health Record (EHR) and Electronic Patient Record (EPR) demonstrator sites were announced in April and June 2000 respectively. These have been placed in the Library.

The NHS Information Authority (NHSIA) is currently finalising deliverables, timescales and associated release of funding with each of the individual sites. Detailed Project Initiation Documents will be available on the NHSIA website at http://nww.nhsia.nhs.uk once the Project Briefs have been approved.

The work of the demonstrator sites is being supported by three projects managed centrally by the NHSIA:

Definition of level 3 EPR for acute hospitals for integrated care pathways and electronic prescribing. The total cost of this work will be around £39,000, which will be met from the NHSIA's central budget;

Definition of the components of the first generation EHR that will need to be in place by 2005 to support 24-hour emergency care access to patient records. This year the NHSIA will spend around £62,000 against this activity, with further work being commissioned in years 2001–03. The cost of all of this work will be met from the NHSIA's central budget;

The development of an evaluation programme to ensure the sites will deliver solutions that can be applied on a national basis (£1.7 million from the Modernisation Fund has been set aside for this programme).

The management costs of ERDIP are being funded from the NHSIA's central budget.

In total, (including the £1.7 million), up to £13.1 million from the Modernisation Fund will be used to support the cost of the two-year demonstrator programme. These funds will be used to deliver solutions earlier to the NHS and are in addition to the £132 million allocated for local investment in the implementation of the Strategy in 2000–01. Further sums will be made available to the Service as part of the spending review settlement for the period 2001–04. These will be announced in the autumn as part of the three-year allocations for health authorities.

Departmental Employees (New Deal)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff are employed by his Department under the New Deal for Young People. [137961]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 13 November 2000, Official Report, columns 551–52W.

Assaults on Staff

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for the Home Department about measures to protect NHS staff from assault. [137933]

Mr. Denham: Our campaign to tackle violence against NHS staff, the "NHS zero tolerance zone", has been developed by the Department working with colleagues in the Home Office, Lord Chancellor's Department and in the Crown Prosecution Service.

This cross-Government approach is also reflected in the new national sentencing guidelines which were issued to magistrates courts in September for a wide range of offences. The guidelines now include as aggravating factors, to be taken into account when sentencing, whether the offence occurred in hospital or medical premises and whether the victim was serving the public.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has also met recently with the Home Secretary and other Ministers to discuss the role of the National Health Service in local crime and disorder reduction partnerships.

PACT data

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when PACT data were last published; and if he will make a statement. [138031]

Ms Stuart: PACT data are not published but are made available quarterly to health authorities, primary care groups and primary care trusts for their internal use. Data covering the period January to March 2000 were issued in September. The next report covering the quarter April to June is expected to be available by the middle of December.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent research his Department has commissioned into the causes and treatment of myalgic encephalomyelitis. [138168]

Mr. Denham: The most recent project commissioned by the Department is a systematic review to determine the clinical effectiveness of treatments and interventions for chronic fatigue syndrome/myalgic encephalomyelitis. The review was commissioned for a working group which is looking at the efficacy of available treatments and interventions for chronic fatigue syndrome/myalgic encephalomyelitis (CFS/ME). The results of this review will inform the final report produced by the CFS/ME Working Group. In addition the National Health Service Health Technology Assessment Programme has recently commissioned a study on the effectiveness of cognitive behavioural therapy in chronic fatigue syndrome.

Prescription Pricing

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the performance of the Prescription Pricing Authority in giving accurate and up-to-date information to primary care groups. [138313]

Ms Stuart: There are currently delays of three months, resulting from the large number of prescriptions which fell within Category D of the Drug Tariff last year. The Prescription Pricing Authority has now begun to clear the backlog and will have completed this task by September next year. Meanwhile the authority is providing monthly forecasts for the availability of Prescription Pricing Authority information reports for the next two-month period to every health authority chief executive and professional adviser, and to every primary care group/trust.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the need for NHS dental treatment in South East Cornwall; and if he will make a statement. [138276]

Mr. Hutton: Demand for National Health Service dentistry remains high throughout Cornwall. We have invested £436,431 for 12 Investing in Dentistry grants, generating up to 37,500 extra registrations with dentists in Cornwall. In addition the personal dental services pilot scheme treats emergency and urgent patients at 20 sites across Cornwall.

On 28 September 1999 my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced that within two years there would be access to NHS dentistry for everyone who wants it via NHS Direct. The dental strategy, "Modernising NHS Dentistry—Implementing the NHS Plan", published on 19 September 2000, shows how that pledge can be met. The strategy focuses on the areas of access, quality and oral health and is supported by £100 million new funding. Responsibility for dentistry is devolved to health authorities, which will be performance managed on service provision in their area.

Training Costs

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of training a (a) doctor, (b) nurse, (c) occupational therapist, (d) physiotherapist and (e) speech and language therapist; and if he will make a statement. [138404]

Mr. Denham: In the period between entry to medical school and full registration, it is estimated that training a doctor costs between £200,000 and £250,000. Doctors generally continue training after full registration. As the duration and nature of post-registration training varies greatly and as service and training costs are closely related it is not possible to provide a meaningful estimate of the total cost of training.

The latest year for which figures are available show that in 1999–2000 the national average estimated cost of training a nurse was £11,000 per annum; an occupational therapist £7,000 per annum; a physiotherapist £7,200 per annum and a speech and language therapist £7,000 per annum. These costs are inclusive of tuition, bursary and salary support costs. Most courses are of three years duration.

Secure Units

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recent evaluation he has made of methods of control and restraint in local authority secure units for young people; [138434]

(2) when he will decide on a national standard of accredited methods of control and restraint in local authority secure units for young people. [138435]

Mr. Hutton: The methods of control and restraint adopted in each local authority secure unit are monitored and evaluated as part of the continuing inspection programme of secure establishments for children carried out by the social services inspectorate.

Guidance on permissible forms of control in children's residential care was issued in 1993.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish regulations for residential and nursing homes under the Care Standards Act 2000; what the timescale is for the implementation of the regulations; and if he will make a statement. [138422]

Mr. Hutton: We will be consulting on regulations for care homes under the Care Standards Act 2000, soon. The regulations will be implemented in time for the start of the National Care Standards Commission in April 2002.

NHS Trusts (Market Testing)

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to NHS trusts on market testing of (a) laundry, (b) cleaning and (c) catering services. [138448]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 15 November 2000]: The abolition of compulsory market testing of laundry, cleaning and catering services in the National Health Service was announced in September. Under new guidance to be published in due course NHS trusts will be required to demonstrate value for money in terms of quality, cost and patient satisfaction across all their support services.

Euro

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost to the NHS to date has been of the national euro changeover plan. [138731]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 16 November 2000]: Public sector spending on changeover planning to date is set out in the Treasury's Fourth Report on Euro Preparations, published on 6 November 2000. Copies of the Report are available in the Library.

Cancer Research

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the Government response to the Science and Technology Committee 6 report of Session 1999–2000, HC723, on Cancer Research; and if he will make a statement. [139648]

Yvette Cooper: We have published the Government Response today, as Cm 4928, and copies are available in the Library. We welcome the thorough inquiry into all the research and related issues that the Committee has conducted. We accept many of the recommendations in the report.

When the Committee published its report, we decided that an essential first step in improving cancer research and, through this, cancer care in this country, was to create a NHS Cancer Research Network. By 2003, we will be investing an additional £20 million each year on this new initiative.

The NHS Cancer Research Network will have a direct impact on the quality of cancer care by integrating research and cancer care; improving the quality, speed and co-ordination of cancer research; and increasing the number of NHS organisations, health care professionals, and patients participating in cancer research studies. The initial target for the NCRN will be to double the number of cancer patients entering trials within three years. The first step in establishing the NHS Cancer Research Network is to commission a Co-ordinating Centre and an appointment has now been made, following an open competition.

The Co-ordinating Centre will be a joint enterprise. Two groups will work together to achieve the overall aims of the NHS Cancer Research Network. A consortium involving the universities of Leeds and York and the MRC Clinical Trials Unit, led by Professor Peter Selby will concentrate on operating a network for controlled trials, especially of new approaches that have shown promise in diagnosing, treating and caring for patients with cancer. Professor David Kerr will lead the NHS's contribution to early studies translating advances in basic science into promising new treatments for cancer through a network of centres.

In relation to further action, we agree with the Committee that a new 'bricks and mortar' institute for cancer research is not the best way forward in this country. We need a different type of mechanism to plan and co-ordinate the drive on cancer research in general. We have asked the Department's Director of Research & Development (Professor Sir John Pattison) and the National Cancer Director (Professor Mike Richards) to consult all those involved in the funding and delivery of cancer research, and then to come forward with definitive proposals for a National Cancer Research Institute (NCRI).

Through these and other measures outlined in our response, the Government will be taking a major step forward in the benefits cancer research can bring to patients. We thank the Committee for their work and their contribution to the debate on improving cancer research and care in this country.

Correspondence

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter of 19 June from the right hon. Member for North East Hampshire regarding the Director of Social Services of Hampshire County Council, Mr. Butler. [138904]

Ms Stuart: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Competitive Sports

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent assessment he has made of the role of competitive sports in secondary education. [134936]

Jacqui Smith: Competitive sports in schools play an important role in providing extra-curricular physical activity for schoolchildren. They are a compulsory part of the National Curriculum for Physical Education for pupils aged between 5 and 14 and are one of the options for pupils aged 14 to 16. HMCI's Annual Report looked at a sample of 115 primary schools and 53 secondary schools, and without exception, all secondary schools provided opportunities to participate in extra-curricular sports, and three quarters of primary schools provided similar opportunities for the older range of pupils. As part of the Government's Sports Strategy, the first phase of School Sports Co-ordinators has just been established. They will work with families of primary and secondary schools in areas of greatest need to provide children with even more opportunities to compete and participate in a wide range of school sports, and will also promote school team competitions.

Payroll Administration

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the costs of payroll administration in his Department and associated agencies and non-departmental bodies in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [135994]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 1 November 2000]: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost, as the elements of the payroll administration costs for the Department and its agencies and non-departmental bodies are not available in aggregated form.

Student Loans

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how the receipt of a London weighting allowance in a salary is treated by the regulations governing the repayment threshold and liability under the student loan scheme. [136534]

Mr. Wicks: Borrowers with mortgage style loans may apply to defer repayment of their student loan for a year at a time if their income is not more than 85 per cent. of national average earnings. London weighting is treated as part of the borrower's income. Borrowers with income contingent loans are liable to repay 9 per cent. of gross income (taxable or liable to national insurance) over £10,000 a year. London weighting is treated as part of gross income.

Higher Education Students

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list, in respect of each of the last five years, by (a) age category, (b) mode of study, (c) gender, (d) ethnic origin and (e) socio-economic group, the total number of students (i) applying to enter higher education and (ii) entering higher education. [137372]

Mr. Wicks: The latest available data, covering students applying to full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses via the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS), are shown in the following tables (a) to (d). Final figures for autumn 2000 entry will be released by UCAS in January 2001. UCAS does not cover applicants or accepted applicants to part-time courses. The available data, collected by the Higher Education Statistics Agency, on entrants to part-time undergraduate courses is shown in table (e). The figures show that, for example, the numbers of students from ethnic minority and working class backgrounds have remained unchanged or increased a little since the introduction of fees, comparing 1996 (the year before fees were announced) with 1999. Applications generally rose in 1997 after the changes in university finance from 1998 were announced in July 1997.

Schools Inspectorate

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what restrictions exist on the future disclosure of material held in his Department's files on former members of the Schools Inspectorate. [137914]

Ms Estelle Morris: My Department's policy is that personal information will be disclosed only where there is a legal duty to do so or where the individual concerned has given their consent.

Learning and Skills Councils

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of appointees (a) to the National Learning and Skills Council and (b) to local learning and skills councils have declared recent political activity, broken down by involvement in their respective parties. [137853]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 13 November 2000]: Appointments to the Learning and Skills Council are still being made. Once this process is complete I shall write to the hon. Member with this information and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Engineering Degrees

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students were studying for engineering degrees in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000; and what proportion this represents of those studying for degrees in each year. [138306]

Mr. Wicks: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Schools (Suffolk)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) pupils and (b) teachers there were in Suffolk in (i) primary, (ii) middle and (iii) upper schools for (A) the latest period for which figures are available, (B) 12 months previously, (C) 24 months previously, (D) 36 months previously and (E) 48 months previously. [138541]

Age Discrimination

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has held with the insurance industry about measures to prevent age discrimination in employment. [137623]

Ms Hodge: The Government have to date had no direct discussion with the insurance industry about measures to prevent age discrimination. However, our Code of Practice on Age Diversity in Employment has been widely disseminated and promoted across all sectors including the financial services sector.

We are supporting the Code with a series of research projects, which are looking in more depth at specific areas of age discrimination. A recently commissioned project will look at ageist barriers to employment, including insurance measures. This research will provide firm information on which to base our future discussions with the insurance sector. Findings from this research will be published during 2001.

Ballots (Grammar Schools)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what has been the cost to public funds of grammar school petition and ballot procedures which have been implemented to date; [138443]

(2) what costs have been incurred by his Department in respect of retaining Electoral Reform Society services during grammar school (a) petitions and (b) ballots. [138444]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 15 November 2000]: On the matter of Departmental staffing costs in relation to the grammar school ballots policy, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 1 November 2000, Official Report, column 504W.

The Department has paid Electoral Reform Services £292,391.09 for services undertaken in relation to grammar school petitions and ballots from March 1999 to date. This breaks down as follows:

Financial year	Total payments to ERS (£)
1998–99	14,599.94
1999–2000	217,705.86
April-October 2000	[1]60,085.29

[1] Of this, £1,780.07 was for printing, postage and administration costs relating to the Ripon ballot.

Footballers (Work Permits)

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many work permits have been granted to date to professional footballers (a) from non-EEA countries for the 1999–2000 season, (b) that had played for their country in at least 75 per cent. of the competitive, 'A' team matches for which they were available for selection during the two years preceding the date of the work permit application and (c) from countries whose FIFA ranking was at or above 70th place in the official rankings list when averaged over the two years preceding the date of the work permit application. [138626]

Ms Hodge: For the 1999–2000 football season:

(a) the Department granted 80 work permits to professional footballers from non-EEA countries for the 1999–2000 season;

(b) 71 met the criteria of having played in at least 75 per cent. of their country's competitive 'A' team matches for the two years preceding the date of work permit application;

(c) 73 met the criteria of the player's country having a FIFA ranking of at or above 70th place in the official rankings list when averaged over the two years preceding the date of the application.

Overall of the 80 permits issued, 65 met both of the published criteria—(b) and (c) in the question asked. The additional 15 permits were issued on the positive recommendations made to the Department by the independent football review panels.

Higher Education

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from organisations in (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland concerning proposals by the Quality Assurance Agency for higher education on the nomenclature of higher education qualifications; and if he will make a statement. [138352]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 16 November 2000]: The need for greater clarity and consistency in the use of higher education qualification titles is recognised by both higher education institutions and employers. The Quality Assurance Agency has published its proposals for a qualifications framework for higher education together with a position paper on the nomenclature of qualifications. A further revised consultation paper was issued on 14 November. My officials have received a small number of comments on the framework and these have been addressed in the revised consultation paper. A separate framework for Scotland is being introduced and questions on this should be addressed to the Scottish Parliament.

Computers Within Reach Scheme

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the cost has been of phase 1 of the Computers within Reach scheme. [138860]

Mr. Wills: Phase 1 of the Computers within Reach scheme has just been announced. The first phase of the scheme is intended to provide 35,000 recycled computers and printers, and will attract funding of £5,250,000 to the contractors operating the pilots.

In addition, the individuals who receive each PC (except a small minority in a linked scheme, Wired Up Communities) will be asked for a £60 contribution towards the cost. For those individuals who have special needs that require further adaption of the computer or software we have a further budget available. The Department has also bulk purchased software from a software company to run on the recycled computers. There will be further costs in relation to the operation and evaluation of the scheme. These costs have not been fully finalised at present.

National Grid for Learning

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for the future development of the National Grid for Learning. [139409]

Mr. Wills: I can today announce that we have commissioned a study to look at the future development and financing of the National Grid for Learning (NGfL). It will include an analysis of the full range of options for future progress and will produce recommendations about the best way forward.

New technology in schools is changing all the time. When we started the national drive to get all our schools connected to the internet three years ago, very little had been done to prepare our schools, teachers or pupils for new technology.

In the last three years we have achieved a tremendous amount. Today, 98 per cent. of secondary schools and 86 per cent. of primary schools are online. That is a total of 20,200 schools connected to the internet compared with around 6,500 in 1998. The Prime Minister recently announced a further £1 billion investment to step up the drive to use new technology to raise standards in schools.

However, we must renew and re-invigorate the National Grid so that it moves with the times. It is critical that it provides accessible, high-quality, interactive content and that schools have the fast internet access that will enable them to make the best use of it. The study we have commissioned will look at the best options for securing these outcomes and the best ways of financing them, including making the best use of the private sector.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES SESSION 1999–2000 VOLUME 356

6th November—17th November 2000

Printed indexes to Hansard

The volume index is one of three printed indexes to Commons Hansard produced from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS). It contains references to material in the bound volumes of Hansard. The other indexes produced are:

- The fortnightly index to Hansard. This covers the same date range as the volume index but references are to the column numbering in the daily parts and weekly edition of Hansard.
- The sessional index to Hansard. This contains references to material in the bound volumes for a whole session.

Indexes on the Parliamentary website

Fortnightly, volume and sessional indexes covering material from the beginning of the 1999/2000 session will also appear on the Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk with links to the full text of Hansard.

SCOPE

The indexes include entries covering:

- The content of all material recorded in Hansard, including debates, procedural motions and questions.
- The names of all Members contributing to the Parliamentary business recorded in Hansard.
- The names of some types of Parliamentary business whenever they occur in Hansard. These are 'Ministerial statements', 'Business statements', 'Opposition days' and 'Estimates days'.

ARRANGEMENT

- All headings are in one word-by-word alphabetical sequence, with Members' contribution entries distinguished from other entries by italics.
- Where a Member contributes to Parliamentary business and is the subject of Parliamentary business there are separate contribution and subject entries, the subject entry coming first.
- Entries beginning 'Mac' and 'Mc' are sorted in one sequence as 'Mac'.
- 'St', when abbreviated for Saint, is filed as 'Saint'.
- Numbers are filed as if spelt out, e.g. '10 Downing Street' as if 'Ten Downing Street'.

HEADINGS

Choice of headings

- Specificity—Entries summarise the overall content of a debate or question as specifically as the various POLIS thesauruses allow. For example, Education, Higher education, Universities or the name of a particular university is used depending on the breadth of the item.
- Name headings—Specific entries are included for the names of people, places, institutions, organisations, committees, programmes, initiatives, publications and legislation when these constitute the overall subject of an item.
- Organisations and subjects—Organisation entries are preferred for material about the general performance, administration and staffing of an organisation (for example, United Kingdom Passports Agency, Standards). Subject entries are preferred for what organisations do as part of their duties (for example, Passports, Fees and charges).

Geographical coverage

- Subject headings—Subject headings are assumed to refer to the whole of England, Great Britain or the United Kingdom unless otherwise stated.
- Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales—Material relating to the whole of Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales is indexed under these headings.
- Places within the UK—Material about specific towns, areas and institutions is entered under the name of the specific town, area or institution.
- Foreign countries—Most material relating to foreign countries is collected under the name of that country. Some additional material may be found under the names of—groups of countries, areas within countries, geographical features, place names associated with particular issues, politicians and heads of state, international bodies, and institutions and companies operating in those countries.
- EC/EU material—General material about the European Communities and European institutions as bodies is entered under 'European Communities' and 'EC institutions'. Organisational material about specific communities and institutions is entered under the name of the body, for example 'European Coal and Steel Community' or 'European Parliament'. Material about what the Communities and institutions are doing or propose to do is entered under various subject headings beginning 'EC' such as 'EC environmental policy'.

Parliamentary material and business

- Material about Parliament—This is indexed under 'Parliament', the names of the two Houses, the 'Palace of Westminster' and parts of the Parliamentary estate (such as 'Portcullis House').
- Committees—Material about committees is indexed under 'Committees', types of committee (such as 'Select committees') and the names of individual committees (such as 'Home Affairs Select Committee').
- Parliamentary proceedings/procedures—Material discussing these is indexed under the specific type of proceeding (such as 'Parliamentary questions' or 'Oral questions'), procedure (such as 'Calling of Members') or issue (such as 'Unparliamentary expressions').
- Legislation—Entries for Parliamentary proceedings on bills and statutory instruments are entered under their titles. Where the lead word of the bill or statutory instrument does not provide a full or clear indication of the subject there are additional subject entries when the bill or instrument is debated. For example, debates on the 'Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill' have entries under 'Pensions' and 'Social security benefits' as well as under the title of the Bill.
- Members' names—These are given in the form by which the Member prefers to be known.
- Speaker and Chair—Contributions by the Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Contributions from the chair during Committees of the Whole House are brought together under 'Chairman of Committee of the Whole House'. Significant rulings and statements (as opposed to routine comments) are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements' in both cases.

Guidance on headings

- Cross references—'See' references indicate all the material has been entered under another heading. 'See also' references indicate that additional information may be found under another heading.
- Concept thesaurus—A copy of the subject thesaurus to POLIS, listing the concept entries used in the index, is available on the Parliamentary website. A hard copy is available from the Head of the POLIS Unit, House of Commons Library, 1 Derby Gate, London, SW1A 2DG (020 7219 6456).

REFERENCES

- References in the indexes are to columns rather than pages.
- References to debates, but not questions, are accompanied by the date of the item.
- There are separate sequences in Hansard for the material taken on the floor of the House, Westminster Hall sittings and written questions:
  - References consisting of a number by itself indicate material taken on the floor of the House.
  - References ending in 'wh' indicate Westminster Hall sittings.
  - References ending in 'w' indicate written questions.
- References under all headings except the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in one numerical sequence irrespective of whether the material is taken on the floor of the House, is discussed at a Westminster Hall sitting or is a written question.
- References under the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in numerical sequence under the following headings:
  - Debates etc. (which includes interventions and points of order as well as significant contributions to debates);
  - Sittings in Westminster Hall (covering all debates held as part of the Westminster Hall sittings); and
  - Questions (which includes written, oral and private notice questions).

ABBREVIATIONS

The following abbreviations are used in connection with the progress of bills:

- 1R=First reading
- 2R=Second reading
- Com=Committee stage
- Rep=Report stage
- 3R=Third reading
- res=resolution
- amendt(s)=amendment(s)
- *=matter taken formally without debate or division.

Parliamentary background

- The Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk contains a range of information about Parliament and the full text of some Parliamentary papers and proceedings including Hansard.
- Information on current Parliamentary business is provided in the House of Commons Information Office Weekly Information Bulletin, available on the website and from The Stationery Office (020 7873 8499).
- Further information on Parliamentary proceedings and procedures is available from the House of Commons Information Office (020 7219 4272).
